MONTHLY SUMMARY

OF

COMMERCE OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

JULY, 1904,

PREPARED IN THE

BUREAU OF INSULAR AFFAIRS,

WAR DEPARTMENT.

EXPLANATION OF REGULAR STATISTICAL TABLES.

General imports.—The regular statement of imports of merchandise, by articles and countries, in this publication is what is termed the statement of general imports, embracing imported articles entered for immediate consumption on arrival and articles entered for warehouse.

The term “entry for consumption” is the technical name of the import entry made at the custom-house, and does not imply that the goods have been actually consumed, but simply that they have been delivered into the custody of the importer and that the duties on the dutiable portion have been paid.

The values of articles imported are governed by the regulations in effect May 1, 1899, which prescribe that the values of imported merchandise subject to duty shall be “the actual market value or wholesale price of such merchandise as bought and sold in usual wholesale quantities at the time of exportation in the principal markets of the country from whence imported, and in the condition in which such merchandise is there bought for exportation or consigned for sale, including the value of all cartons, cases, crates, boxes, sacks, and coverings of any kind, and all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the merchandise in condition ready for shipment.”

Domestic exports.—The regular statement of domestic exports, by articles and countries, in this publication exhibits the exports of domestic products or manufactures, also exports of commodities of foreign origin which have been changed from the form in which they were imported or enhanced in value by further manufacture.

The value of exports of domestic merchandise is their value at the time of exportation in the ports of the island whence they are exported.

Tonnage tables.—In the tables of tonnage movement the tonnage is stated in net tons of 100 cubic feet carrying space after the prescribed allowances are made for crew space, engine space, etc.

Weights.—In all tables published the ton weight is 2,240 pounds and the hundred weight is 112 pounds, unless indicated otherwise.

Customs districts.—Statements of imports and exports are shown by customs districts which have a certain prescribed limit of territory with a port of entry.

ABACA (MANILA HEMP.)

There has just been received by the Bureau of Insular Affairs of the War Department a report on the production of abaca recently prepared by Mr. H. T. Edwards, fiber expert of the Bureau of Agriculture at Manila, and although much has been said about the industry in the past it is believed that the increasing importance of the production of this fiber, and the fact that the report offers some additional information warrants its publication herein in part at the present time. Exports of abaca from the islands during the fiscal year 1904 amounted to 129,742 tons, valued at $21,749,960, representing seventy-two per centum of the total exports from the Philippines during that period. Many new plantations are being developed, and present conditions and future prospects of the industry are very encouraging. In fact one of the first things that will be noticed in connection with this fiber industry is its rapid development in recent years despite the fact that the most primitive methods and implements are employed therein. The reason for this increase is set forth in the report, from which the following information was, for the most part, derived.

Abaca enjoys the unique distinction of being strictly a Philippine product. The plant has been introduced into India, Borneo, the West Indies, and other parts of the world, but only in the Philippine Islands has the fiber ever been successfully produced as an article of commerce. This fact has undoubtedly been of great advantage to the Philippine planter. The lack of competition, however, has resulted in the continuance of obsolete methods of cultivation and fiber extraction better suited to the eighteenth than the twentieth century. The opportunities for increasing the production of abaca in the Philippines are almost unlimited. Enormous areas of good abaca land are yet untouched, while the greater part of the land already under cultivation might yield a greatly increased product if more careful attention were given to the various details of cultivation. The introduction of irrigation would make possible the planting of abaca in many districts where it is now unknown. The perfection of a machine for the extraction of the fiber will increase the entire output of present acreage by nearly one-third, as that amount is now lost by wasteful hand stripping processes at present employed. In each successive step, from the first selection of the land to the final treatment of the fiber, the progressive planter should have, as his ultimate object, the production on a given area of a maximum quantity of superior fiber at a minimum cost. With the industry established and conducted on this basis, abaca will continue to hold its place as the first product of the islands.

HISTORY.

The first authentic account of the use of either abaca or banana fiber in the Philippines is that given by an Englishman, Dampier, who lived in Mindanao in 1686. This writer described the "banana textoria," both as an edible and as a fiber producing plant. One of the companions of Magallanes, Antonio Pigafita, prepared a description of the plants of the Philippines, but in this paper no mention is made of abaca. The fiber was first exported from the islands about the beginning of the last century, but the exports did not become important until about 1850. In 1820 a sample of abaca was brought to Salem, Massachusetts, by John White, a lieutenant of the United States Navy. From 1824 to 1827 the fiber began to be used quite extensively in Salem and in Boston. The gradual increase in production is shown by the following table:

EXPORTS OF ABACA FROM THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

1818	41 Tons.
1825	276 "
1840	8,502 "
1850	8,561 "
1860	30,388 "
1870	31,426 "
1880	50,482 "
1890	67,864 "
1900	89,438 "
1901	124,257 "
1903	137,752 "

The numerous attempts which have been made to introduce abaca into other countries have never met with any considerable degree of success. In 1822 experimental plantings were made in Calcutta and in 1877 in Madras. The plant grew fairly well in both instances but the fiber produced was of an inferior quality. The experiments with abaca in the Andaman Islands, Borneo, Florida and the West Indies have not resulted in any general introduction of the plant into these countries.

BOTANY.

The common banana, musa sapientum; the plantain musa paradisiaca; and abaca, musa textilis, are closely related species of the same genus. The plants of these three species resemble each other both in appearance and in habits of growth. The banana plant produces a fiber similar in appearance to abaca but lacking strength. The fruit of the abaca somewhat resembles that of the banana but is smaller, filled with black seeds, and of no economic value.

The abaca plant is a large tree like herb, fifteen to twenty-five feet high. The stem rises from a perennial root-stock. A single root-stock usually bears a cluster of from twelve to twenty stalks or shoots. The stem is cylindrical, green, fifteen feet or more long, and is formed of the overlapping leaf sheaths. The leaves are oblong, deltoid at the base, bright green above, glaucous beneath, petiole from one to two feet long. The flower bud remains at the root until after the plant has attained its full size and then pushes rapidly upward. From the center of the leafy envelopes at the top of the stem emerges the flowering spike which varies greatly in size and length with different species. The flowers are borne in clusters arranged at intervals along the rachis, each cluster being subtended by a large membranous bract. These bracts are very conspicuous, entirely cover the half-whorls of flowers, and are so densely laid one upon the other that they form a kind of flower cone. This cone is usually a dull violet color, smooth and glossy. The fruit is green, oblong trigonous, two to three inches long, one inch in diameter, not edible, but filled with large, black seed.

While the abaca plant quite closely resembles the banana, the two may be easily distinguished. The abaca is ordinarily smaller than the banana, its stem is more slender and of a darker color. The abaca leaf is a darker green, narrower, more tapering, and of a firmer texture than that of the banana. A peculiarity of abaca is a dark, thread-like line running length-wise on the right hand side of the under surface of the leaf.

There are many different varieties of abaca, often twelve or fifteen in one locality. The principal differences between these varieties are in color and shape of stem, color and size of leaves, greater or less tendency to produce suckers, and in development, resistance, and strength of fiber. The desirable qualities in an abaca plant are:— A plant which is hardy, grows rapidly, and withstands drought; which has a stem long, thick, and not too tapering, and which produces fiber in abundant quantity, of good quality and easily extracted.

DISTRIBUTION.

Abaca is distributed throughout the greater part of the Philippine Archipelago. The area where it is successfully cultivated lies, approximately, between the parallels 6 and 15 north latitude, and the meridians 121 and 126 east of Greenwich. The most favorable locations are along the eastern and southern coasts. It may be cultivated up to one thousand or twelve hundred meters above sea-level, but above this height the temperature is not favorable to its best development. The more important abaca provinces and islands are Camarines, Albay, Sorsogon, Masbate, Mindoro, Marinduque, Samar, Leyte, Panay, Negros, and Mindanao. It is grown to some extent in other provinces of Luzon and in many of the smaller islands. The amount of land at present under cultivation, or that which is suitable for abaca, cannot be very definitely estimated, inasmuch as the plant is often grown on small and widely scattered areas back in the mountains. The method of propagation, of cultivation, and of fiber extraction are all very similar in the different parts of the Archipelago. The following is a brief statement of the local conditions in several of the more important abaca producing provinces:

Camarines.—Abaca is cultivated in twenty-seven of the thirty-five townships of this province. There are three important abaca districts, that of Daet, in Camarines Norte, the Lagonoy district, in the eastern part of the province, and the Mount Iriga district, in the south. These different districts are located on the slopes of old volcanoes, where the soil is rich, deep, and well drained. In these locations abaca has been successfully grown on the same land for over forty years. There are several different varieties produced in these sections, the more important being the white abaca, a highly esteemed variety and a heavy producer of excellent fiber; another known as the yellow abaca, also a heavy producer, but not yielding as good a quality of fiber as the former; there is also a plant known as the mountain abaca, which is shorter and yields a very white fiber. In addition to the varieties mentioned there is a tall slender plant which produces a long but rather delicate fiber known locally as Quidit, and a number of kinds of banana plant the fibers of which are utilized for making fine and delicate fabrics. Abaca land is valued at from $30 to $50, local currency, per hectare. Wages are from fifty to seventy-five cents a day. At the present time carabaos are scarce. Coconuts, cacao, and coffee are grown on the same land with the abaca plants. A large amount of fiber is consumed locally for making cloth, cordage, and other materials.

Albay.—This province is the leading abaca producing section of the islands. It is estimated that half of its area is devoted to the production of this fiber plant. The soils of Albay have been largely derived from the ashes and dust of Mayon volcano, and are quite similar to those of Camarines. The rainfall, showing an annual average for six years of 118.42 inches, is heavier than that of any other abaca province. The important varieties of abaca are Samorong itom, Samorong pula, Samorong puti, Samina, Inisarog, Sabaon, and Canaraon. Of these varieties, the first three are superior, as they grow rapidly, resist drought, and produce a good quality of fiber. Cultivated land is valued at from $200 to $300 per poiso (3.472 acres). Labor is worked on the share system. Carabaos can be bought for about $150 each. The relative production of different grades of fibers is as follows:

Superior current	1	per cent.
Current	7½	"
Dudoso (low current).....	78	"
Seconds	9	"
Reds.....	4	"
Strings.....	½	"

During 1903, 263,585 bales of fiber were exported from the province of Albay. The manufacture of sinamay or abaca cloth is an important local industry and consumes a certain amount of the fiber produced.

Sorsogon.—Some of the best abaca produced in the islands comes from Sorsogon. The greater part of this province is suitable for abaca cultivation, and many large plantations are now being worked. In the southern part of the province is a large volcano, Bulusan, on the slopes of which are located many fine abaca plantations. The soil here is rich, mellow loam, similar to those previously described. This province has been at somewhat of a disadvantage in having poor harbor facilities and but few roads. The latter are now being improved so that Sorsogon, with its very favorable soil and climatic conditions, should continue to rank as one of the leading abaca provinces.

Leyte.—In quality of fiber produced Leyte is nearly if not quite the equal of Albay. Abaca is grown in nearly all parts of the island, some of the best fiber being produced in the southern towns around Malitbog bay. In that district the country is generally mountainous, but in the northern part of the island abaca is found grown largely on the lowlands. The soil in these locations is a heavy silt loam of alluvial origin. Farther back towards the mountains the soil is more sandy. The fiber produced in the northern part of Leyte is transported to Tacloban and Carigara and thence shipped to Manila.

Samar.—The greater part of the interior of Samar is a rough, mountainous country, with no roads and poor trails. For some years this island has been in a very unsettled condition, so that there has been but very little development and many old plantations have been abandoned. Nearly the entire production of fiber is in the northern half of the island, some of the best coming from the valley of the Gandara River. Calbayog, Catbalogan, and Borongan are important shipping points. The principal varieties of abaca grown in Samar are jilajas, a small plant yielding a white, strong fiber, and lawsig, a larger plant yielding more fiber but of an inferior quality. Labor is worked on the share system. Carabaos are scarce, and are valued at about $150. But a small portion of Samar is under cultivation. Land suitable for abaca may be found in almost any part of the island.

Davao.—The district of Davao, in southeastern Mindanao, is one of the most promising of the abaca-producing provinces. The climatic conditions in this district are extremely favorable, there being a heavy and evenly distributed rainfall, a high degree of humidity, and freedom from severe winds. The soil is rich, deep, medium loam, and large areas which have already been cleared of the heavy timber are now in good condition for abaca planting. The fiber produced in Davao is of excellent quality and always commands a high price in the Manila markets.

CLIMATE.

A suitable climate is the first and most important requisite for successful abaca cultivation. In selecting the location for a plantation this subject should receive the most careful attention. The four conditions of climate which directly affect the growth of abaca are the amount and distribution of rainfall, the degree of atmospheric humidity, the frequency of heavy winds, and the degree of temperature.

The structure and habits of growth of the abaca plant are such that it requires a large and continuous supply of moisture. We invariably find that the provinces where abaca cultivation is the most successful are those having a heavy and evenly distributed rainfall. In many parts of the Philippine Islands there is a long and pronounced dry season, during which time there is no rainfall whatever. Unless water is available for irrigation abaca cannot be grown in these districts. A period of six weeks' drought will check the growth of the plant, and longer periods of dry weather will injure both plant and fiber. In Albay, Davao, and certain other localities, where there is a so-called wet and dry season, seldom does a week pass without heavy showers. The actual amount of rainfall required by abaca will be modified by the nature of the soil, the degree of atmospheric humidity, and the methods of cultivation.

The growth of abaca is influenced very directly by the relative humidity of the atmosphere. The degree of atmospheric saturation usually follows the rainfall in its variations, so that in districts where there is a heavy precipitation there are also many days of excessive humidity, the effect of which is almost the same as actual rain. The atmospheric conditions in southern Mindanao are more favorable for abaca cultivation than those of any other part of the Archipelago.

The abaca plant, with its broad heavy leaves, may be seriously injured by severe wind storms. The function of a leaf is to assimilate plant food, and when it becomes stripped and torn as is often the case this power of assimilation is diminished and the growth of the plant is correspondingly retarded. It is always desirable to select locations as protected as possible, and it may be found necessary to plant trees which shall serve as wind-breaks.

No investigations have been made relative to the degree of heat necessary to the growth of the abaca plant. If a sufficient amount of moisture is available to supply the heavy evaporation it can doubtless withstand a high degree of temperature. A low temperature is very unfavorable to its best development. The maximum and minimum temperatures for Leyte and Albay—the two most celebrated abaca producing provinces—for the year were 33.80 degrees to 22 degrees C. for Leyte and 32 degrees to 18.20 degrees C. for Albay.

SOIL.

Next in importance to climatic conditions is the selection of a suitable soil. The appropriateness of any particular soil must depend in a degree on the relative conditions of climate and location. For instance, in a district having a heavy rainfall, and where the land is low and flat, a soil of certain consistency would become over-saturated, while the same soil, if the land were sloping, the rainfall less heavy, might be sufficiently well drained. The qualities to be selected are a rich, mellow loam of lasting fertility, cool and moist, and at the same time well drained, containing a large amount of decayed vegetable matter, and preferably of volcanic origin.

Throughout the important abaca districts of southern Luzon, nearly all of the large plantations are situated on the lower slopes of old volcanoes. The soils in these locations are deep and fertile, well drained, and in every way desirable. As abaca is grown on the same land without replanting, fertilizing, or rotation for a period of at least twelve or fifteen years, the soil must be of lasting fertility in order to stand the long drain on its resources. The demand of the plant for a constant supply of moisture, and its equal dislike for over-saturation, require a condition of medium consistency, a soil that will retain moisture without becoming wet. The foothills and lower mountain slopes covered with a medium growth of timber furnish the ideal location for a plantation. Here the land is well drained and shaded and full of decayed vegetable matter. On such land abaca can be successfully grown for an almost indefinite length of time.

THE PLANTATION.

The prospective planter must consider three things, the selection of a location, the preliminary work of establishment and organization, and the system and method by which the plantation is to be developed.

The location should be, if possible, in a district where abaca is already grown. This will be the surest way of determining that soil and climatic conditions are suitable, and will also guarantee a supply of suckers, or "seed," for starting the new plantation. The supply and quality of available labor, the condition of roads, and the facilities for water transportation; the supply of water, wood and building materials, and the distance from a market, are all matters that should receive consideration.

The site having been selected, the boundary line should be carefully located, and the plantation mapped out with a view to future development. At some central point, where there is a supply of good water, the necessary buildings may be erected. These will include a residence for the manager, a storage shed for tools and implements, and a shelter for animals. As soon as this preliminary work is finished the clearing and planting should be commenced.

The most difficult problem which the tropical planter has to face, and that which more than any other will determine his ultimate success or failure, is the manner in which he controls and directs his labor. To have available at all times as many workmen as can be used to advantage, and to so handle them as to secure the best results, requires a thorough knowledge of the native character and an infinite amount of tact and patience. When the plantation is first started arrangements should be made for building a native village of sufficient size to accommodate all natives needed in the plantation, together with their families. By this method the plantation manager will always have under his direct control a fairly reliable supply of labor; and if this system is properly carried out, the workmen will be more contented, better satisfied, and in every respect more easily handled than if secured in any other way.

HARVESTING.

The first stalks are ready for cutting at from twenty months to three years after planting. The time required for development varies considerably with different varieties and in different localities. After the first harvest it is customary to cut over a plantation about every eight months.

The abaca plant when mature consists of a group or cluster of from twelve to twenty stalks, all growing from the one root. These stalks are in all stages of development, but usually two or three will mature and can be cut at about the same time. The stalk is ready for cutting between the time of the appearance of the flower and the development of the fruit. If cut either before or after this period an inferior quality of fiber will be obtained. When the plant is in flower the large violet colored flowered bracts fall to the ground, making it an easy matter when passing through the field to select the plants which are ready for cutting.

The stalk is cut with a bolo or knife having a sharp blade. The cutting should be made two or three inches from the ground and on a slant. If a perfectly horizontal cut is made water will collect on the stump causing it to rot and thus injuring the root and the remaining shoots. After the stalk has been cut the leaves are trimmed off and it is then ready for the first operation of fiber extraction.

EXTRACTION OF FIBER.

The extraction of fiber should commence within twenty-four hours after the cutting of the stalk. If left a longer time than this the fiber is liable to become discolored and weakened. As the abaca trunk is heavy and the fiber extracting apparatus is light and easily transported, it is customary to move the latter from place to place and to extract the fiber near the spot where the plant is cut.

The trunk or stalk of abaca is often twelve or fifteen feet long, and from one to one and one-half feet in diameter. This trunk consists of a small central fleshy stem, one or two inches in diameter, around which are a number of thick overlapping layers, each layer being the stem, or petiole, of a leaf. The fiber is obtained from the outer portion of these leaf stems. The process of fiber extraction consists of two distinct operations: First, the removal of the ribbon like strips of fibrous material from the leaf stems, and Second, the separation of the individual fibers by pulling these ribbons under a knife.

The laborer sitting on the ground with a trunk of abaca across his knees inserts under the bark of one of the leaf stems a small, sharp piece of bone called a "locnit," and pulls off a fibrous-strip one to three inches wide and as long as the trunk. One stem will yield two or three such strips. When these fibrous strips have been taken off the remaining fleshy material is removed and each consecutive layer is thus worked down to the central stem of the trunk. The fiber obtained from the three or four outer layers, which are green and hard, will be coarse and dark colored, while that coming from the layers nearest the center of the trunks will be very fine and white. The latter is not always stripped by the natives as it is too liable to break under the knife, but when extracted by this method is used only for the manufacture of various kinds of cloth. When a quantity of these fiber strips has been collected they are carried to some central point where a shed has been erected and an apparatus set up for stripping the fiber. The shed consists of a frame of bamboo poles covered with abaca leaves. The stripping apparatus, or "panguijan," is simple both in construction and operation. It consists of a log set in a horizontal position one or two feet from the ground. On the top of this is fastened a block of smooth hard wood. Over this block is placed a bolo having a blade about one foot long and a handle one and one-half feet long. A rattan is attached to the end of the knife and connected with a bamboo spring above. Another rattan passes from the handle to a foot treadle. The bamboo spring holds the knife down upon the block. Its pressure is easily regulated by lengthening or shortening the rattan. By means of the foot treadle the operator raises the knife when he desires to insert or remove a strip of fiber.

In the process of stripping the operator holds in his right hand one or more of the fiber ribbons and also a short round piece of wood. These strips are inserted under the knife and are drawn through with a quick, steady pull. The ribbon is then removed and reversed, the cleaned end being wound three or four times around the stick. This process of drawing under the knife removes all the pulp or fleshy material, leaving in the hands of the operator a small bunch of clean wet fiber. As the fiber is stripped it is usually assorted into two classes. The work of fiber extraction, while apparently simple, is very exhausting, even for the experienced operator, and many laborers are ruptured by the excessive strain of pulling the fiber strips under the knife. It is a fair day's work to strip one arroba (25 pounds), and the fiber stripper will usually work only two or three days a week.

All the fiber produced in the islands is extracted with this simple apparatus. The color and strength of the fiber—two most important qualities—are determined almost entirely by the manner in which it is cleaned. The two factors in the process which affect the quality of the product, are the condition of the knife blade and the degree of pressure with which the knife is held upon the base block. With a serrated knife, loosely fastened, the fibers are only partially separated, and only a portion of the pulp is removed; the work is easy, the yield large, and the fiber is inferior in quality. With a knife having a smooth edged blade and held firmly on the base block the work of extraction is much more difficult and the waste is greater, but a very superior fiber may be obtained. It has been determined by experiment that the same plant will produce a very superior or a very inferior grade of fiber, depending on the kind of stripping knife used. As a result of using serrated knives the markets have been flooded with enormous quantities of inferior fiber, and cordage manufacturers are continually making complaint about the quality of Manila hemp. The whole future of the industry, depending as it does on the position which abaca continues to hold in the world's markets, it is manifestly to the interest of every producer to discourage the use of the serrated knife.

FIBER EXTRACTING MACHINERY.

Numerous attempts have been made to extract abaca fiber with machinery. A number of the machines used have been in a measure successful, but some obstacle has always prevented their coming into any general use. The greatest difficulty has been that abaca being a very long fiber would not bear the strain of full tension, while being cleaned. It has been necessary to wind the fiber around a cylinder or to hold it in two or three places with a clutch in order to lessen this tension. Cylinders of various kinds of material have been used, but all have resulted in a discoloration of the fiber. The machines thus far constructed have all been based on the old hand process of extracting the fiber by stripping. Inasmuch as sisal and other vegetable fibers are now successfully extracted by machinery, and as several American inventors are devoting their attention to the perfection of a machine for extracting abaca, it is probable that such a machine will come into use before many years. The fiber extracting machine for abaca should be simple in construction, strong, cheap and portable. It must not break, tangle, discolor, waste, or in any way injure the fiber. The introduction of suitable machinery will do more than any other one thing to advance the interests of the abaca industry.

AFTER TREATMENT OF FIBER.

Abaca, after being stripped, is hung on bamboo poles to dry. This drying takes from three to four hours to two days. When thoroughly dry the fiber is collected, tied up in hanks or bundles, and in this condition is shipped by ponies, carabaos, or cargadores, to the nearest market. It is there sold to a Chinese middleman or to the representative of some one of the large exporting firms of Manila. When the fiber reaches the warehouse of the exporter it is carefully sorted into the different commercial grades, and is then baled, each bale weighing 2 piculs or 275 pounds.

Fiber that is to be used locally for the manufacture of cloth undergoes much more elaborate process of treatment. The leaf stem in the center of the stalk is selected and the fiber is often drawn several times under the stripping knife, which gives a product that is fine, soft and white. If to be used for the finest textures it is then placed in a wooden bowl and beaten with a mallet until the required fineness and elasticity are obtained. This process yields a fiber that is almost silk-like and some of the textiles manufactured from best quality abaca rivals in delicacy and beauty the celebrated pina and jusi fabrics.

DESCRIPTION AND YIELD OF FIBER.

Abaca fiber of good quality is from 8 to 12 feet long, of a glossy white color, very light and strong, and of a clean even texture. As cordage material it has no superior, its chief value particularly for ship's ropes being its relative lightness and strength.

The yield of fiber varies greatly in accordance with the variety of the plant, the soil and climate conditions, and the methods of extraction used. Under favorable conditions the annual yield will average from 12 to 16 piculs of dry fiber per hectare, or 687.5 to 967.6 pounds per acre. The average yield throughout the islands is probably below this figure, often not exceeding six piculs per hectare. Under careful management the yield may be brought up to 20 or 25 piculs per hectare. From one-third to one pound of fiber is obtained from a single stalk. In southern Mindanao the estimate is 212 stalks for one picul of fiber. With 1,250 plants to the hectare and an annual yield of four stalks per plant the returns for one hectare would be 23.5 piculs, or 3,245 pounds of fiber.

USES.

Abaca is primarily a cordage fiber, its most important use being the manufacture of various classes of cordage, ropes, and cables. Enormous quantities of the fiber are used in the United States for making binder twine. Because of its lightness, strength and durability it is considered superior to any other fiber for ship's ropes and cables. From the old and disintegrated ropes is made the well-known and valuable Manila paper. In Europe, especially in France, many different articles of clothing, such as shirts, vests, pantaloons, veils, crapes, robes, and women's hats are manufactured from abaca. These materials are highly valued both for their beauty and durability. The fiber is also used to some extent for upholstering, packing and brush-making.

In the Philippine Archipelago a considerable quantity of abaca cordage is manufactured and the raw fiber is also used without being twisted for purposes where tying material is required. The most important local use for the finer abaca fiber, however, is for the manufacture of cloths. The native dress of both sexes in nearly all parts of the Archipelago is made from "sinamay," or abaca cloth. Looms are to be found in nearly every town in the islands. The abaca fiber is frequently woven with either cotton or silk, in an almost innumerable variety of patterns. The fabrics are of every degree of fineness, from delicate silk-like tissues to the coarse material used for fishing nets.

With the introduction of fiber-extracting and textile machinery there should be a largely increased demand for abaca as a textile fiber.

UTILIZATION OF WASTE PRODUCT.

In the extraction of abaca by the methods now employed it is estimated that from 25 to 30 per cent, of the fiber is wasted. At each cleaning shed are found large piles of waste filled with fibrous material. Experiments which have been made indicate that this waste can be advantageously used for the manufacture of paper. In 1887 samples of this material were submitted to paper manufacturers of Barcelona, Spain, and their report on this material was as follows:

Cultivation of 50 hectares (first year) at $15 per H.	750
Fencing and roads.....	200
6 carabaos at $100 each	600
Buildings	400
Tools and implements	200
Overseer at $150 per month	1,800
Incidentals	300
Total	$ 9,400

"Observations made in the course of manufacture permit us to state that abaca waste as a raw material for the manufacture of paper is not only utilizable, but surpasses esparto and hemp, and in its treatment for conversion into paper excels rags and other materials known in the industry."

There is an enormous quantity of this waste produced in the different abaca districts, and at the present time it has no other use than for fertilization. The abundance, cheapness and good qualities of this material are such that its utilization is a subject well deserving of attention.

ESTIMATED COST AND REVENUES OF AN ABACA PLANTATION.

The following is an estimate of the cost of establishing an abaca plantation. The size of the plantation selected is 250 hectares, approximately 625 acres, which is one-fourth of the amount of land that can be taken up by a corporation in the Philippines under the law as enacted by the Congress of the United States.

Planting 50 hectares a year it would require five years to place this amount of land under cultivation. With respect to the cost of clearing and cultivating land, and also the yield, there will be considerable variation, depending upon the existing conditions where the plantation is located. This general estimate is prepared from figures obtained from both American and Filipino abaca planters in the islands. It should be stated that practically all labor employed can be paid for in rice, cloth and other commodities, which will give a profit that should considerably more than pay for all incidental expenses that may occur.

PROSPECTS OF THE ABACA INDUSTRY IN THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

The future development of the abaca industry will depend chiefly on the position which this fiber continues to hold in the industrial world. There is every indication that the rapid growth of shipping, the more extensive use of binder twine, the successful application of manila rope as a transmitter of power, together with other minor uses, will create an increasing demand for abaca that will equal any increase in production. The superior qualities and intrinsic value of abaca are thoroughly well known in all parts of the world. Its only dangerous competitor at the present time is sisal which is an inferior fiber.

The opportunities for the extension of the industry are almost unlimited. Improved methods of cultivation will largely increase the production on land already planted, while enormous areas now covered with forest are in every way suitable for abaca. The introduction of fiber-extracting machinery should result, not only in a large increase in the quantity of fiber produced, but also in a decided improvement in quality.

CONCLUSION.

The abaca plantation of the past has been in general conducted in anything but a business-like manner. Antiquated methods, careless management, and waste have been the rule rather than the exception. The planter of the future who, with carefully selected land, good management, and the intelligent use of modern methods and machinery, aims at the production of a superior fiber at a minimum of cost, has every prospect of ultimate success. With no danger from insects or plant diseases, and but little from unfavorable climatic conditions, abaca is eminently a safe crop. With the present prices and the practically assured future demand it is one of the most profitable branches of agriculture for the Philippine planter.

OF

COMMERCE OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

AUGUST, 1904.

PREPARED IN THE

BUREAU OF INSULAR AFFAIRS.

WAR DEPARTMENT.

EXPLANATION OF REGULAR STATISTICAL TABLES.

General imports.—The regular statement of imports of merchandise, by articles and countries, in this publication is what is termed the statement of general imports, embracing imported articles entered for immediate consumption on arrival and articles entered for warehouse.

The term “entry for consumption” is the technical name of the import entry made at the custom-house, and does not imply that the goods have been actually consumed, but simply that they have been delivered into the custody of the importer and that the duties on the dutiable portion have been paid.

The values of articles imported are governed by the regulations in effect May 1, 1899, which prescribe that the values of imported merchandise subject to duty shall be “the actual market value or wholesale price of such merchandise as bought and sold in usual wholesale quantities at the time of exportation in the principal markets of the country from whence imported, and in the condition in which such merchandise is there bought for exportation or consigned for sale, including the value of all cartons, cases, crates, boxes, sacks, and coverings of any kind, and all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the merchandise in condition ready for shipment.”

Domestic exports.—The regular statement of domestic exports, by articles and countries, in this publication exhibits the exports of domestic products or manufactures, also exports of commodities of foreign origin which have been changed from the form in which they were imported or enhanced in value by further manufacture.

The value of exports of domestic merchandise is their value at the time of exportation in the ports of the island whence they are exported.

Tonnage tables.—In the tables of tonnage movement the tonnage is stated in net tons of 100 cubic feet carrying space after the prescribed allowances are made for crew space, engine space, etc.

Weights.—In all tables published the ton weight is 2,240 pounds and the hundred weight is 112 pounds, unless indicated otherwise.

Customs districts.—Statements of imports and exports are shown by customs districts which have a certain prescribed limit of territory with a port of entry.

OF

SEPTEMBER, 1904.

PREPARED IN THE

BUREAU OF INSULAR AFFAIRS.

WAR DEPARTMENT.

EXPLANATION OF REGULAR STATISTICAL TABLES.

General imports.—The regular statement of imports of merchandise, by articles and countries, in this publication is what is termed the statement of general imports, embracing imported articles entered for immediate consumption on arrival and articles entered for warehouse.

The term “entry for consumption” is the technical name of the import entry made at the custom-house, and does not imply that the goods have been actually consumed, but simply that they have been delivered into the custody of the importer and that the duties on the dutiable portion have been paid.

The values of articles imported are governed by the regulations in effect May 1, 1899, which prescribe that the values of imported merchandise subject to duty shall be “the actual market value or wholesale price of such merchandise as bought and sold in usual wholesale quantities at the time of exportation in the principal markets of the country from whence imported, and in the condition in which such merchandise is there bought for exportation or consigned for sale, including the value of all cartons, cases, crates, boxes, sacks, and coverings of any kind, and all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the merchandise in condition ready for shipment.”

Domestic exports.—The regular statement of domestic exports, by articles and countries, in this publication exhibits the exports of domestic products or manufactures, also exports of commodities of foreign origin which have been changed from the form in which they were imported or enhanced in value by further manufacture.

The value of exports of domestic merchandise is their value at the time of exportation in the ports of the island whence they are exported.

Tonnage tables.—In the tables of tonnage movement the tonnage is stated in net tons of 100 cubic feet carrying space after the prescribed allowances are made for crew space, engine space, etc.

Weights.—In all tables published the ton weight is 2,240 pounds and the hundred weight is 112 pounds, unless indicated otherwise.

Customs districts.—Statements of imports and exports are shown by customs districts which have a certain prescribed limit of territory with a port of entry.

OF

COMMERCE OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS

OCTOBER, 1904.

PREPARED IN THE

BUREAU OF INSULAR AFFAIRS.

WAR DEPARTMENT.

EXPLANATION OF REGULAR STATISTICAL TABLES.

General imports.—The regular statement of imports of merchandise, by articles and countries, in this publication is what is termed the statement of general imports, embracing imported articles entered for immediate consumption on arrival and articles entered for warehouse.

The term “entry for consumption” is the technical name of the import entry made at the custom-house, and does not imply that the goods have been actually consumed, but simply that they have been delivered into the custody of the importer and that the duties on the dutiable portion have been paid.

The values of articles imported are governed by the regulations in effect May 1, 1899, which prescribe that the values of imported merchandise subject to duty shall be “the actual market value or wholesale price of such merchandise as bought and sold in usual wholesale quantities at the time of exportation in the principal markets of the country from whence imported, and in the condition in which such merchandise is there bought for exportation or consigned for sale, including the value of all cartons, cases, crates, boxes, sacks, and coverings of any kind, and all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the merchandise in condition ready for shipment.”

Domestic exports.—The regular statement of domestic exports, by articles and countries, in this publication exhibits the exports of domestic products or manufactures, also exports of commodities of foreign origin which have been changed from the form in which they were imported or enhanced in value by further manufacture.

The value of exports of domestic merchandise is their value at the time of exportation in the ports of the island whence they are exported.

Tonnage tables.—In the tables of tonnage movement the tonnage is stated in net-tons of 100 cubic feet carrying space after the prescribed allowances are made for crew space, engine space, etc.

Weights.—In all tables published the ton weight is 2,240 pounds and the hundred weight is 112 pounds, unless indicated otherwise.

Customs districts.—Statements of imports and exports are shown by customs districts which have a certain prescribed limit of territory with a port of entry.

THE PACKING OF AMERICAN GOODS FOR PHILIPPINE TRADE.

In the Summary for the month of February, 1904, among many other good suggestions to American exporters given by the acting Insular Collector of Customs in the course of a general statement based on customs house experience, there appeared the following serious criticism of the method of packing employed by our manufacturers in preparing goods for the export trade:

"The other point on which the American exporters are extremely lax is that of packing. Goods are packed in much the same way as if they were to be shipped but a few hundred miles by rail to some state of the union, shippers forgetting that before the goods reach the consignee in the Philippines they are handled many times, in addition to a long sea voyage, and the rough handling received at this port in transferring them from the ship to the shore.

"American exporters would do well to study the methods of French and German merchants in this respect, with whom packing is not merely a science, but an art. It is seldom that a package is received in bad condition from either of these countries, and then only in the case of extreme rough handling, while in shipments received from the United States it is not infrequent that a good portion of the packages are in bad condition upon arrival. Other wares are inadequately packed, and much breakage and damage is thereby caused. This is particularly true with regard to stoves, it being the general rule that fifty per cent of those shipped are received in such a condition as to be unsalable and entirely unfit for use. Importers lose not only the value of the goods, but must, in addition, pay duty thereon, unless such goods are abandoned to the government.

"Such methods are not conducive of trade and the ousting of foreign in favor of American manufactures. Foreign merchants may even realize the superiority of American goods, but with such lax and inadequate methods of packing, and the loss and damage occasioned thereby, may, after a few attempts to dispose of such goods, give up the experiment in disgust and return to European goods, which, if not of as good quality or workmanship, are at least received in such a condition as to be salable, and at a reasonable figure."

That this condition of things has since then undergone no change for the better is forcibly evidenced by a recent report to the insular surveyor of customs by a deputy at the port of Manila. This latest indictment of the American exporter cannot be better expressed than in the words of the eye-witness himself:

"I have to call attention to the extremely bad order of the American merchandise landed on the Custom House wharf in the past few days from the steamships 'St. Filians' and 'Indrapura,' both from New York. At least half the cases, if not more, came in more or less damaged condition, some of them so much so that they fell apart on being landed on the wharf and the contents tumbled out."

As an illustration, the deputy collector refers to the damaged condition of certain cases in a big shipment of calicoes and of shoes, from the United States, as follows:

"* * * The calicoes came in large wooden boxes of which at least three-fourths, if not more, were damaged, usually one or both ends bulging out, the nails pulled out by the pressure, and nothing holding but the wooden bands. The manner and amount of packing and the strength of the cases are undoubtedly sufficient for railroad transportation within the United States, but their experience shows they are not sufficient for an ocean trip with the numerous handlings received from start to finish."

In contradistinction to the condition in which American shipments arrive, it is stated that at the same time the above mentioned shipment was being landed there was being unloaded on the customs house wharf a large consignment of piece goods of German manufacture from the steamship "Chiengmai." These goods were packed in bales bound with strong iron bands, the bales being about half the size of the cases of American goods above mentioned, and they came through in excellent shape without damage.

In conclusion he says:

"It is but another illustration of the fact so often witnessed here that the goods, from America come worse packed than those from any other country. It is suggested that it would be in the interest not only of the consignees in Manila but also of the American export trade if the American manufacturers and shippers for foreign trade would be advised that their manner of packing is destructive, expensive, and in every way bad."

These two arraignments of our manufacturers in the packing of their wares for the Philippine market are by no means new or confined to that market. For years this question of the inadequacy of our packing of goods for foreign trade has been the burden of consular reports from many sources—more particularly from the orient, and so serious an obstacle has it become to our foreign trade that boards of trade are beginning to join our consuls in this agitation to arouse our exporters to a sense of the harm that is being done to our commercial development.

No doubt we have here presented a grave obstacle to the entry of our manufactures into foreign fields, and one that offers a peculiarly discouraging feature in connection with our aspirations for building up a market for our wares in the Philippines. This has proven no easy achievement, unaided as we have been by any tariff advantages, with a people strangers to our manufactured products and mode of life, and with merchants naturally biased in favor of Spanish and European wares. But to these must be added this further handicap of the deplorable spectacle presented by American goods landed on the Manila wharves in such condition as has been described above.

However superior the quality of our products may be, it is not reasonable to expect that in the face of such gross negligence in packing, the Filipino merchant will be tempted to increase his orders and make special effort to introduce American goods among his clientele. The injury thus done to the extension of our market is incalculable, and it will continue until our manufacturers and shippers begin to take their export trade seriously and cease to discredit their wares in foreign markets by want of care and judgment in the mere detail of packing them for those markets.

LEGISLATION FOR THE PHILIPPINES.

The 58th Congress which recently adjourned, notwithstanding the many other important measures demanding attention, found opportunity to devote some time to certain legislation on behalf of the Philippine Islands. The enactment of most importance was that known as the Cooper bill, approved February 6, 1905, and in it is embodied a number of measures that were urgently needed for the proper conduct of insular affairs. The first provision of this act exempts from taxation both in the United States and in the Philippine Islands all bonds issued by the Philippine Government. This exemption was provided for by Congress in the case of the certificates of indebtedness issued for the maintenance of parity between the new Philippine currency and its gold standard of value, and also in connection with the "Friar lands" bonds, but did not obtain with respect to bonds issued on account of municipal improvements. The advantage of such an exemption to the Philippine Islands is apparent, and it works no injury, on the other hand, to state, county or municipal interests in this country.

Provision is made in the second section of the act for issue of bonds to the amount of $5,000,000, to enable the insular government to raise funds for the purpose of constructing port and harbor works, bridges, roads, school buildings, court houses, penal institutions, and making other public improvements for the development of the islands. Under this authority the Bureau of Insular Affairs of the War Department, acting for the Philippine Government, prepared and on March 10th, 1905, sold a $2,500,000 issue of Philippine public works and improvement bonds bearing interest at four per cent per annum, payable at the option of the Philippine Government after ten years and due at the end of thirty years. The issue was many times over-subscribed and was sold at $109.06 per $100 plus accrued interest.

This last issue of bonds is the fifth loan that has been made by the Bureau of Insular Affairs on account of the Philippine Government, and in accordance with Congressional authorization, previous loans made being as follows:

An issue of certificates of indebtedness of date May 1, 1903, amounting to $3,000,000, sold at $102.513, and another issue dated September 1, 1903, of an equal amount, which went at $102.24 per $100. These two issues were made for the purpose of maintaining the parity of the new Philippine peso, and reached maturity in one year from date of issue.

An issue of $7,000,000 worth of bonds of date February 1, 1904, payable in thirty years, to enable the Philippine Government to purchase the Friar lands, sold at $107.577 per $100.

The next two issues of certificates of indebtedness of $3,000,000 each, dated May 1, 1904, and September 1, 1904, were for the purpose of retiring the two series May 1, 1903, and September 1, 1903, upon maturity, and sold at $101.181 and $101.41, respectively.

The results of these sales of Philippine certificates and bonds, and especially that of the last issue (March 10, 1905), are substantial and gratifying evidences of public confidence in the stability of the Philippine Government. It may be of interest at this point to state that the total indebtedness of the islands at present is but $15,500,000. Of this $6,000,000, incurred by the issue of the certificates of indebtedness, is covered by a fund of that amount held in the insular treasury for no other purpose than that of maintaining the parity of the Philippine currency. An obligation of $7,000,000 was incurred by the issue of bonds to pay for the Friar lands, and will be liquidated out of a sinking fund to be created by the sale of those lands to tenants. The balance of the islands' indebtedness is made up by the recent issue of $2,500,000 worth of bonds for public works and improvements.

One of the most important provisions of the Act of February 6, 1905, if not the most important, is that conferring upon the Philippine Government power to guarantee interest at the rate of four per centum per annum on money invested by railroad companies in the establishment of railways in the islands. The installation of these railways is to be made under the supervision of the Philippine Commission. There are now only about 120 miles of railway in operation in the islands. The area of the archipelago is 130,000 square miles with a total population of nearly 8,000,000 people. The railroad mileage for this area and this population is so small when compared with that of dependencies of other countries in the world that the reason for lack of development of the resources of the islands is obviously apparent. The government has already had surveys made of several of the proposed routes. It is desired that the lines be constructed as rapidly as possible. At this early date some of the largest financial concerns in America are making application for concessions, and there is not likely to be any lack of capital to carry out the undertaking,—especially in view of the fact that one of the greatest drawbacks to the advent of capital has been removed, that of uncertainty as to the policy of the United States Government.

For the purpose of reassuring persons who have considered the possibilities of investing capital in the islands, and to eliminate any doubt as to the present intention of the government that may have been a deterrent factor heretofore, the Secretary of War has made public his views upon the subject in a letter, as follows:

"March 16, 1905.

"I have your letter of March 7, in which you say that a common reported interpretation of my remarks before the House Committee on Ways and Means is that it is the purpose of the administration to give independence to the Filipinos within the next four years, and that this produces great timidity about investments in the Philippines, growing in great part out of the undercurrent of doubt as to what the future of those islands is to be.

"In reply I beg to say that I cannot prevent misconstruction of my remarks, except by repeating to you what I actually think in regard to the matter. The policy of the administration is the indefinite retention of the Philippine Islands for the purpose of developing the prosperity and the self-governing capacity of the Filipino people. The policy rests on the conviction that the people are not now capable of self-government, and will not be for a long period of time; certainly not for a generation, and probably not for a longer time than that, and that until they are ready for self-government it would be a violation of trust for the United States to abandon the islands.

"The question as to the future, however, is one wholly of conjecture. The important fact is the present policy, which is that of indefinite retention of the islands. What shall be done in the future, when the people have reached a condition where they can be safely trusted with their own government, is a question which will doubtless have to be settled by another generation than the present, both of the American and of the Philippine people, to whose wisdom and generosity we may safely trust the solution of the problem. Should the Philippine people when fit for self-government, demand independence, I should be strongly in favor of giving it to them, and I have no doubt that the American people of the next generation would be of the same opinion.

"I think it much more likely, however, that after the Filipino people shall have been associated with the American people for a generation or more, and shall have tasted the prosperity they will find behind the national tariff wall, they will prefer a relation to America like that of Canada or Australia to England, to one of absolute independence.

"Very respectfully yours,
W. H. TAFT."

Another measure adopted by Congress was with regard to the immigration laws in the Philippine Islands. The United States laws are applicable to the islands, but there has been some doubt as to whether their administration devolved upon insular officials or was to be carried out by United States immigration officials. As the latter plan would have been a cumbersome and impracticable one, the question was by common consent held in abeyance pending further legislation, such as is embodied in that section of the Act of Congress of February 6 providing that the United States immigration laws shall be administered by the insular government and that funds accruing thereunder shall be paid into the insular treasury for the benefit of the islands.

Section nine of the Act is an amendment of the Act of Congress of July 1, 1902, merely changing measurements used therein in connection with rules for surveying mineral lands to their approximate equivalents in the metric system.

The operation of the new currency system in the islands has demonstrated the need of silver certificates of large denominations. Ten pesos were the largest authorized by the original currency act of Congress. Therefore the Philippine Government has been empowered by Congress to issue silver certificates in larger denominations, and accordingly bills of 20, 100 and 500 pesos are now being prepared by the Bureau of Printing and Engraving.

Under the law heretofore in force in the islands with regard to tonnage dues on vessels entering ports of the archipelago certain taxes and assessments were imposed that in some respects proved a drawback to the shipping business, and the Philippine Government was without authority to make such modification of the requirements as the welfare of commerce demanded. Section eleven of the recent enactment, however, gives the Philippine Commission power to modify, suspend or repeal these so-called tonnage regulations.

Besides what has been mentioned the 58th Congress made certain provisions of the revised statutes of the United States applicable to the Philippine Islands, by an Act approved February 6, 1905, in order that fugitives from justice seeking refuge in the islands may be returned for trial to the country wherein the crime with which they are charged was committed.

The tariff of the Philippine Islands that went into effect in 1901 has in its application developed certain defects in classification of commodities, certain inequalities of taxation,—in some cases excessive rates, and in others lower rates than should be imposed. After consideration of a modified schedule by a committee of merchants at Manila, the Collector of Customs, the Philippine Commission, and the Secretary of War, certain proposed changes were published for the purpose of obtaining further suggestions from other interested persons. The proposed tariff as finally submitted to Congress was passed with few changes on March 3, 1905, and becomes effective in the islands sixty days after date of passage.

While the Curtis bill for the reduction of United States customs duties on Philippine sugar and tobacco imported into the United States was not passed by the late Congress, much has been accomplished toward ultimate favorable action in line with the Curtis bill. Hearings were held by the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives during which both sides of the question were investigated in exhaustive detail. Not only was it made clearly apparent that the apprehension entertained by sugar and tobacco interests of this country over future production in the islands was unwarranted by the facts in the matter, but it was also shown that in equity the Philippines should be allowed the same concessions in favor of her products as have been granted to Hawaii and Porto Rico.

The report of the Committee on Ways and Means as to its findings is as follows:

The only logical result from our possession of the Philippine Islands is free trade between the islands and the rest of the United States. It is definitely settled that we retain them until the people are prepared for self-government. To bring about this will require at least a generation. The question of their final disposition must be postponed for many years. In the meantime they are wards of the United States, a part of our common country, and are entitled to fair trade relations. It is now as much our "plain duty" to give them free trade as soon as practicable as it was in the case of Porto Rico.

It would be manifestly unjust, however, to give them free access to our markets while they collect the same rate of duty upon articles imported from the States that they do upon articles coming from the rest of the world. The free entry of our products into the Philippine Islands is impracticable at the present time. The treaty of Paris provides that Spain shall have the same advantage in tariff duties on exports to the Philippine Islands that the United States receives for a period of ten years. This treaty stipulation expires by its own limitation in January, 1909. Until that time we cannot give our products free entry into the Philippine Islands without giving the same privilege to Spain. Such a measure would greatly cripple the revenues of the Philippine Islands.

During the past year the revenues on imports from Spain amounted to $552,227; on imports from the United States, to $849,339; in all, $1,401,566. The total revenues from customs duties on goods imported into the Philippine Islands were $6,736,505. The Philippine Government need more revenue than they now get. We must not cut off the source of revenue from Spain. In case we give Spain free trade, the loss of revenue would not be measured solely by the amount of duty now collected on Spanish importations. There would naturally be a large increase in imports from that country in case it were given the preference over the rest of the world, and the revenue would suffer a corresponding loss. Free trade on articles coming from the United States to the Philippine Islands must, therefore, be postponed until 1909.

By the terms of the Philippine tariff bill, just passed the House, imports into the Philippine Islands from the United States which are dutiable will pay an average rate of about 20 per cent. It is but fair that a like duty should be levied and collected upon goods imported into the United States from the Philippine Islands. All the duty collected under this act goes without rebate into the Philippine treasury by force of existing law. Whatever revenue results from this bill will therefore be added to the Philippine Government. It is obvious that there will be some revenue arising from this act, although it may be quite limited in amount.

When the treaty clause expires, if the revenues are otherwise sufficient, there will not longer exist any reason for a duty on imports either way, and the Philippine Islands will take their place with Hawaii and Porto Rico, so far as revenue laws are concerned, while that territory belongs to the United States.

Under this bill everything wholly the growth and product of these islands, except sugar and tobacco, comes into the United States free of duty. On these articles, in whatever form they are imported, the bill proposes a duty of 25 per cent of the Dingley rates.

It is not believed that the lowering of duty on either sugar or tobacco will in any way interfere with any of our industries. It appeared on the hearings that Philippine sugar paying the rate of duty provided in this act can be imported into the United States at New York at 3.06 cents per pound for "sorted sugar." This is for "sorted sugar." The sugar there is divided into four classes—the first class polarizing at 88° (this constitutes a quarter of it), three-sixteenths polarizes at 84°, the third grade at 81°, and the fourth grade (which is molasses, apparently) at 70°. The third and fourth grades make up nine-sixteenths of the total. An importation of "sorted sugar" means an importation of these four grades as they run. A cargo of sorted sugar was brought into New York in July last at 3 3-16 cents per pound; another cargo, in October, at 3½ cents a pound. These were actual sales. Owing to the short crop of beet sugar in Europe, on account of the abolition of bounties, sugar has advanced in Hamburg and New York since these dates. But it is evident that these advances will not be permanent should the world's crop in the future be larger.

After the 1st of July, 1906, the act extending the coastwise laws to the commerce between the United States and these islands will compel the carrying of all freight in American bottoms. Many interested in the carrying trade believe that freight rates will be doubled after that date, in which case a quarter of a cent per pound must be added to the cost of Philippine sugar landed in New York.

The Philippine Islands have a market nearer home for their sugar. China and Japan have imported immense quantities of Philippine sugar, and it is believed that at the close of the present war this trade will rapidly increase. So long as China and Japan are their only market their merchants will take advantage of the situation and compel the Filipino, as they do now, to sell his sugar at a low price compared with the world's price. If we give them an opportunity to get into our markets at a lower rate of duty they will be able to compel the Chinese merchants to pay a better price. While little of the Philippine sugar would come to the United States, this law will give them an emergency market here and greatly benefit them in the increased price they will be able to obtain from China and Japan.

It is interesting to note that granulated beet sugar, ready for the market, is produced in Colorado at a cost of $3\frac{1}{2}$ cents per pound, and in Michigan at a cost of 4 cents. It also appears that by improvements in methods this cost is likely to be greatly reduced in the near future. The "sorted sugar" of the Philippines, when transformed into granulated, would increase in price per pound by at least a cent and a half. Under these circumstances what menace could there be to the beet-sugar industry?

There is no possibility of injury to the American tobacco grower with the duty proposed under this bill, or even in free trade with the islands. Wrapper leaf sells in Manila at 30 cents per pound, but it can not become a rival for the Connecticut leaf in our markets on account of quality, and all of it is used in making cigars in the islands. The duty under this bill brings the cost to 76 cents a pound in New York, without counting the freight. Connecticut wrappers seldom sell for more than 50 cents per pound. Fillers sell in the Manila market at 10 cents per pound. This is the price of the best fillers raised in the United States. The duty under this bill would be $8\frac{3}{4}$ cents on fillers, and even with free trade our growers would have the advantage of the freight rate. Under this bill as amended Sumatra wrappers, although manufactured in these islands, must pay the full Dingley rates when imported into the United States.

Nor is this bill a menace to the cigar-making industry. It is true that the wages of cigar makers are much lower in Manila. They are compelled to pay low wages because of their restricted markets, but wages in the Philippine Islands are increasing. It appeared before the committee that they had doubled since American occupation, especially in Manila, where the cigar-making industry is located. The immense demand for manila hemp, of which the islands have the monopoly of the world, has increased the wages in this industry to $2 and $3 (gold) per day. This occasions a demand for higher wage in the other industries. The number of laborers is restricted. Our immigration laws are in force, and no Chinese can come in. The Chinese that are there, numbering only about 75,000, will not become laborers in any of these industries. They prefer to be and are, shop-keepers, porters, etc. The scarcity of laborers in the islands will force wages up and greatly curtail any advance on present industrial lines.

The total output of cigars made after the Cuban fashion is only 105,000,000. For home trade their cigars are made wrapped with the leaf lengthwise and the seam pasted from end to end. Obviously such cigars could not be given away in the United States. It requires an expert to make a cigar after the Cuban style, and the number of makers in the islands of such cigars must increase very slowly, if at all. It is not believed that the American people will overcome their prejudice against the cigar made of Philippine tobacco. It does not suit their taste. But if the 100,000,000 cigars were put upon our market, there would be no appreciable effect when we consider that we consume 7,000,000,000 of cigars in a year and that the consumption is rapidly increasing.

We have provided in this bill that all the Philippine Islands cigars imported here, entered for consumption, shall pay the same internal revenue taxes as are paid on our own cigars. Each box will bear an internal revenue stamp at the rate of $3 per thousand.

* * * * *

It must be admitted that considerable benefit should accrue to the islands on account of the legislation obtained and to which reference has been made. Furthermore, from the report of the Ways and Means Committee on the Curtis bill it is plain to be seen that the careful consideration of the testimony submitted by the sugar and tobacco interests of the United States in opposition to that submitted on behalf of the islands products has resulted only in convincing evidence of the equity of the appeal for this tariff reduction.

No. 5, SERIES 1904-1905.

OF

NOVEMBER, 1904.

PREPARED IN THE

BUREAU OF INSULAR AFFAIRS.

WAR DEPARTMENT.

EXPLANATION OF REGULAR STATISTICAL TABLES.

General imports.—The regular statement of imports of merchandise, by articles and countries, in this publication is what is termed the statement of general imports, embracing imported articles entered for immediate consumption on arrival and articles entered for warehouse.

The term “entry for consumption” is the technical name of the import entry made at the custom-house, and does not imply that the goods have been actually consumed, but simply that they have been delivered into the custody of the importer and that the duties on the dutiable portion have been paid.

The values of articles imported are governed by the regulations in effect May 1, 1899, which prescribe that the values of imported merchandise subject to duty shall be “the actual market value or wholesale price of such merchandise as bought and sold in usual wholesale quantities at the time of exportation in the principal markets of the country from whence imported, and in the condition in which such merchandise is there bought for exportation or consigned for sale, including the value of all cartons, cases, crates, boxes, sacks, and coverings of any kind, and all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the merchandise in condition ready for shipment.”

Domestic exports.—The regular statement of domestic exports, by articles and countries, in this publication exhibits the exports of domestic products or manufactures, also exports of commodities of foreign origin which have been changed from the form in which they were imported or enhanced in value by further manufacture.

The value of exports of domestic merchandise is their value at the time of exportation in the ports of the island whence they are exported.

Tonnage tables.—In the tables of tonnage movement the tonnage is stated in net tons of 100 cubic feet carrying space after the prescribed allowances are made for crew space, engine space, etc.

Weights.—In all tables published the ton weight is 2,240 pounds and the hundred weight is 112 pounds, unless indicated otherwise.

Customs districts.—Statements of imports and exports are shown by customs districts which have a certain prescribed limit of territory with a port of entry.

OCCUPATION.

PREPARED IN THE

EXPLANATION OF REGULAR STATISTICAL TABLES.

General imports.—The regular statement of imports of merchandise, by articles and countries, in this publication is what is termed the statement of general imports, embracing imported articles entered for immediate consumption on arrival and articles entered for warehouse.

The term “entry for consumption” is the technical name of the import entry made at the custom-house, and does not imply that the goods have been actually consumed, but simply that they have been delivered into the custody of the importer and that the duties on the dutiable portion have been paid.

The values of articles imported are governed by the regulations in effect May 1, 1899, which prescribe that the values of imported merchandise subject to duty shall be “the actual market value or wholesale price of such merchandise as bought and sold in usual wholesale quantities at the time of exportation in the principal markets of the country from whence imported, and in the condition in which such merchandise is there bought for exportation or consigned for sale, including the value of all cartons, cases, crates, boxes, sacks, and coverings of any kind, and all other costs, charges, and expenses incident to placing the merchandise in condition ready for shipment.”

Domestic exports.—The regular statement of domestic exports, by articles and countries, in this publication exhibits the exports of domestic products or manufactures, also exports of commodities of foreign origin which have been changed from the form in which they were imported or enhanced in value by further manufacture.

The value of exports of domestic merchandise is their value at the time of exportation in the ports of the island whence they are exported.

Tonnage tables.—In the tables of tonnage movement the tonnage is stated in net tons of 100 cubic feet carrying space after the prescribed allowances are made for crew space, engine space, etc.

Weights.—In all tables published the ton weight is 2,240 pounds and the hundred weight is 112 pounds, unless indicated otherwise.

Customs districts.—Statements of imports and exports are shown by customs districts which have a certain prescribed limit of territory with a port of entry.

HISTORICAL REVIEW OF PHILIPPINE COMMERCE.

ANALYSIS OF TRADE UNDER SPANISH AND AMERICAN OCCUPATION.

Source of data employed. The following review of Philippine trade for the past half-century is based on official figures, which, for earlier years have only recently been available. Previously the accessible Spanish records were far from complete, and even with the aid of supplementary figures from commercial and consular sources anything approaching a continuous survey of the islands' commerce on the present scale has been impossible.

Official figures still incomplete. It is much to be regretted that even now complete official data are wanting. Records in full for 1859 are not at hand; there is an interval from 1868 to 1872 inclusive, surrounding the very important period of the opening of the Suez Canal, for which figures are wanting; while a most unfortunate absence of detailed trade returns from 1895 and on through the unsettled years with which the Spanish occupation ended breaks the continuity of the line of investigation from past to present. With these exceptions, however, the official reports for the period under review are complete, and—at least for the present—inference must govern these minor lapses.

Commercial importance of Suez Canal to the islands. The modern history of Philippine commerce may be said to date from the opening of the Suez Canal in 1870. Other important dates might be mentioned in a trade that goes back more than three centuries, and no doubt the opening of the islands to the commerce of the world in the early part of last century marked an epoch, as to a lesser degree did the advent of steam navigation. But the Suez Canal, halving the distance to what even then was looked upon as the future field of activity from a trade standpoint, and eliminating to a large degree the oriental isolation of earlier times, presents an element of such commercial and recent importance to the islands as to make its opening mark the modern era in their history, and in the general survey here given of a half-century of their commerce the purpose is to include all that is modern and relevant to modern conditions, at the same time setting forth its immediate pre-Suez beginnings.

Some serious difficulties are to be noted in connection with the analysis and tabulation of these official figures. The exports, made up of but few commodities and those of specific character, admit of easy treatment, but the imports, comprising a wide range of articles and subject to a varying classification more or less arbitrary for tariff purposes, present quite a different problem. In the import trade detailed analysis has not been carried back farther than 1885 by reason of the increasing difficulties of classification for purposes of comparison in earlier years. In the last decade of Spanish rule, for which detailed official returns are available (1885-1894), the various imports under two separate tariff classifications have been grouped according to a series of general groups of commodities that has been in use in American times. In this way, with allowances for the interval of 1895-1899, representing the unrecorded period of Spanish rule and the somewhat erratic figures of the opening American era, there is presented, in the grouping of the trade of the islands at its best in Spanish times parallel with the last five years of American occupation, a survey of imports bearing on present conditions and trustworthy for comparative purposes to a degree that could not be claimed in an extension of the analysis back into the more complicated system and confused state of the Spanish records antedating 1885.

A further difficulty is to be noted in the distribution of trade by countries. Hongkong with all the conveniences that it offers as a free trans-shipment port and clearing-house for oriental traffic, is a seriously disturbing element in the value of oriental trade statistics, and in American times effort has been made to arrive at the ultimate source and destination of Philippine imports and exports and reduce the irregularity to a minimum. In earlier years these trans-shipments seem to have been taken at their face value though they were never reported and credited separately as Hongkong trade. From 1855 down to the opening of the Suez Canal or thereabout, it appears to have been included in that of China; it then heavily increases the credits of "British Possessions" (British East Indies) until 1888, when it is again found inflating Chinese trade down to the end of the Spanish recorded period (1894). With regard to many commodities it was no doubt a true Chinese trade, but taken as a whole its inclusion goes far to discredit the figures of these countries. The changes above referred to, made by the Spanish statisticians in the disposition of this Hongkong trade, should be considered in a study of the figures. The credits of these two countries have for their chief value the presentation in collective form of the oriental trade of the islands. Yet even this is only approximately true as there is no doubt that much of the American trade with the islands passed via Hongkong, and that the credits of the United States in Spanish times are considerably less than the actual trade, with a corresponding inflation of totals for China or British East Indies, according to the year under consideration. And though the evidence is not quite so clear, the inference is that this applies as well to European trade.

Statistical difficulties and method of analysis pursued.

Hongkong a disturbing factor in oriental statistics.

Balance of Trade.

Excess of exports in Spanish times.

The average annual value of shipments from the archipelago has been somewhat in excess of its purchases, as is usually the case with imperfectly developed countries. In 1855, with an export trade of six million dollars and five million dollars worth of imports, a million was left to the good of the islands and with an occasional exception and variation in the proportions this was the general condition to the end of the Spanish regime. The islands' trade for this period reaches its maximum in 1880 and remains about stationary for the remaining fifteen years, including gold and silver approximated at the annual value of a million dollars each in imports and exports, with a balance in favor of exports of about three million and a half; but it is a point worthy of note, in view of the construction that is often put upon the significance of such a balance, that imports, after reaching a maximum in 1880-1884, actually decline in the face of practically stationary exports, thus showing an increased average of this apparent prosperity with a trade balance of over four million and a half during a decade that ended in revolution.

This balance of trade has met with a complete reversal in American times in the face of imports that are nearly double and exports that show large increases over the closing figures of the Spanish regime. About two million is shown in 1900, five and a half million in 1901, nearly five million in 1902, a million and a half in 1903, and less than half a million in 1904. There has thus been a balance against the islands that reached its maximum in 1901 and steadily declining has almost disappeared in 1904.

Reversal of trade balance in American period.

This so-called adverse balance of trade has been considered a reproach upon American administration in the light of Spanish conditions by those who are disposed to reduce national exports and imports to the elementary terms of personal income and expenses; but the subject is a far broader one, and this disparaging inference does not seem warranted when other factors are considered which are involved in these trade totals.

That the industrial energies of the people have been greatly stimulated contemporary with American occupation, in spite of insurrectionary disorders and misfortunes beyond human control, is evidenced by the large increase in exports. These, during the last five recorded years of Spanish rule, averaged a scant twenty million dollars and cannot be assumed to have increased appreciably in the years following, in view of the fact that exports had remained virtually stationary at this average from 1880. Yet in the American quinquennial period under review these average exports of twenty million become about twenty-seven and a half million, and testify to the stimulated productiveness and increased purchasing power of the islands.

Increased exports
prosperity.

On the other hand the declining imports, that average about sixteen million in the closing Spanish period, in 1900-1904 exceed thirty million. It is not intended to consider the significance of declining imports and a growing balance in trade as elements of prosperity in a country in view of the revolution that followed, but into the heavy imports in American times it is worth inquiring, with the preliminary comment that this side of the islands' trade under the opening years of American administration involve features that play little or no part under the established conditions of earlier years.

Increased imports and the American soldier.

With the increased wages which have characterized the new era taken in connection with the increased exports, the resulting increased purchasing power of the people would naturally call for a corresponding increase in imports, and no doubt an increase in consumption by the masses is a factor in these nearly doubled totals. Another point to be considered is the American soldier as a consumer in the islands. The counter-argument that Spain also had an army of occupation holds neither as to number nor character. With a military force in the islands of from fifty to seventy thousand about the time of the heaviest adverse balance of trade, with the American soldier the best paid in the world and one of the most liberal of spenders, it is easy to see how his transient presence in the islands operated to considerably swell imports to supply his demands. In an import trade so relatively small that in Spanish times it amounted to but about two dollars per capita annually, such a non-producing force with money to spend and tastes that required foreign goods became in a large measure responsible for the increased imports of the period, and though there is no means of stating specific amounts as to various articles, it is but a reasonable assumption that the demands of the American soldier in 1900 and 1901 played no inconsiderable part in the exhaustion of merchants' stocks and maximum imports of about this time.

Yet another factor in these exceptional imports is to be found in the item of ordinary supplies, a portion of which were ultimately purchased from the Manila market at practically the same figure that they could be obtained elsewhere. These have entered to some extent into the trade returns and in the present year appear almost wholly there, as a result of the agreement now in force between local houses and the insular authorities, under which all supplies for the government pass through the regular customs and mercantile channels in consideration of a fixed rate of profit being charged by the merchants. The Spanish statistics under review furnish no guide in this respect in earlier times, but whatever the custom may have been this feature of the islands' imports could never have assumed the importance that it has under American rule. The reorganization and equipment of the government according to American standards, and the liberal scale on which insular improvements have been inaugurated, ranging from school-books for the educational system to harbors and highways for commerce, involve the importation of large quantities of supplies of all kinds, figuring to a greater or less degree in the import returns, but which are more of the nature of extraordinary outlays and permanent investments than an annual trade.

It is thought that these considerations will, to some extent, explain the once large but now disappearing excess of imports over exports in the American period, and dispose of the adverse balance of trade as compared with Spanish times, in so far as it reflects on the relative general prosperity of the islands,—a reflection which, however, the increased exports alone serve to disprove.

In spite of the present tendency of this adverse balance to disappear, it would seem probable that the heavy relative credits in favor of exports in former years will not again prevail. A smaller balance, with larger investments of export proceeds in imports for permanent improvements to increase production and raise the standard of living in the islands, would make a more creditable showing than the large balances of the closing years of Spanish rule, which seem to have utterly disappeared from the islands without conferring any permanent betterment.

Heavy excess of exports undesirable.

Distribution of Import Trade.

In considering the import trade of the Philippines from the standpoint of distribution by countries, for analytical purposes, it falls first into the three geographical subdivisions of Europe, Asia and America. Considered as a whole, Europe has furnished the greater values, though the statistics make the Orient a close second. Europe led in the pre-Suez period but a paradoxical coincidence is to be noted, that from the opening of the canal or thereabout Oriental credits increase heavily, while European shipments, which would alone seem to have benefited by the event, show very slight response to it. Oriental trade, which in the pre-Suez period amounted to but three million and a half, becomes in 1873, the first year after the opening for which official figures are available, nine million out of a total of thirteen, and from that time gained a lead over Europe which continued for many years. This, however, is presumably due to an added importance given by the increased commerce to Hongkong as a distributing point, and no doubt the larger oriental figures are in a great measure real European gains. In 1885 Oriental trade drops to five million dollars, and with some irregularities declines to three million in 1894, while the European, during the same period, remains steadily close to ten million. In the increased imports of the American period the Oriental totals have again reacted and surpass the European, due to heavy rice imports.

The Oriental trade, while credited chiefly to and subdivided between China and British East Indies, as previously mentioned, is so confused by an indefinite Hongkong trade, made to alternate in different years between the two, as to give little insight into the actual commerce of the islands with these countries. Direct Chinese shipments during 1900-1904 have averaged four million dollars, and those of British East Indies about half this sum, which, together with the large rice imports from French East Indies, to be considered later, constitute the present Oriental trade, averaging about fourteen million of the thirty million total, while Europe contributes about twelve million and the United States practically the balance.

Of the European trade the United Kingdom and Spain have been the foremost contributors, and the United Kingdom is by far the most uniformly conspicuous country in the Philippine import trade during the half-century. This was especially true of the pre-Suez period, when half the import trade of the islands was in her hands. The opening of the canal brought no increase to the direct British trade, however, it may have figured in that of Hongkong, and the striking feature in the survey of this long period of Philippine purchases of British wares is the uniformity of the figures and the steady but moderate increase. In the pre-Suez period the United Kingdom is credited with an average of four million in a total of seven and a half million, and her trade from 1880 down to 1904 has remained constantly in the neighborhood of five million, though the total imports have in the meantime quadrupled.

Spain, while second in European importance, rarely, prior to 1885, furnished as much as a million dollars' worth of the imports. From that date, however, she is more in evidence and under the stimulus of the tariff of 1891, which gave her exceptional favors, her shipments increase to over five million dollars in 1893 and 1894, when they exceed those of the United Kingdom; but this lead is not maintained in the American period, during which time her trade has averaged but about two million. Germany is next in order of European prominence, but from 1855 to 1894 her credits rarely amount to a million, though showing a general upward tendency from very small beginnings. From 1900 she is more in evidence with an average of nearly two million. French figures, down to 1894, are never above a few hundred thousand, but in recent years show a tendency to exceed a million.

The trade of the United States—apart from that unknown quantity via Hongkong—was slight prior to the American period, averaging but about two hundred thousand dollars in the pre-Suez days. Since then, down to 1894 it has amounted to but about double that sum, and only in the year 1882 ever exceeded a million; but with import credits of two million in 1900, her trade has grown until in 1904, amounting to $5,098,820, it exceeds that of all other countries but French East Indies with its rice shipments, and represents a sixth of the total.

Distribution of Export Trade.

The export trade of the islands follows the same general lines of distribution as that of imports, but with considerably altered proportions. Of the three leading divisions Europe is the leading consumer of Philippine products throughout the fifty years, due in large measure to the heavy hemp and sugar trade of the United Kingdom and the tobacco trade of Spain. The United States may be credited with the second rank, though the Orient is in some periods a close and even a successful rival. The values of the exports taken by the United States and the United Kingdom present a remarkable parallel throughout. In the pre-Suez period their average purchases are two and a half million each, or half the total. In the nearly doubled average of the total exports for the period down to 1885, the two countries are again credited with an equal trade of six million each, sharing more than half the total equally between them. In the last decade of Spanish rule the trade of each suffers a decline of about half a million, and in the increases of the American period they are still equal sharers, with average purchases of nine million dollars, though the British figures have been more uniform for the five years while the American have increased from smaller beginnings, and are in 1904 $11,654,968, in contrast with the British of $9,035,479, making the United States for the past few years the leading consumer of Philippine exports.

Spain is credited with exports to the value of about a million dollars in the pre-Suez period. Not until 1882 do they amount to two million, but from the last mentioned date they are generally in excess of that sum until the close of the Spanish period. In American times her purchases have been less, and those for 1904, amounting to $1,164,448, are close to the average for the past five years. France as a factor in Philippine exports is of little relative importance prior to American occupation, her credits in earlier years never amounting to as much as half a million, with the single exception of 1894. From 1900, however, her prominence as a purchaser of copra largely accounts for a trade that has fluctuated from one to three million, and amounts to $1,588,851 in 1904. Germany occupies but a nominal place throughout the fifty years, and only in the American period do her purchases amount to as much as a hundred thousand dollars.

The exports to China and British East Indies in earlier times show the same confusion due to Hongkong trans-shipments as noted in the imports. The slight decline in the average of the aggregate Oriental trade to be noted in the American period compared with that prior to 1894, in the face of a considerable increase in totals, is probably due to Hongkong losing in some measure its former importance through the decline of sugar exports for Chinese consumption, and the increased hemp trade finding its way directly from Manila to its American and British destination.

Exports.

The export wealth of the Philippines is and has been almost wholly dependent on the agricultural products of the islands. Of the existence of rich mineral resources there seems to be little question, and the record of companies organized throughout the past to exploit them is a long one, but owing to mismanagement and labor difficulties they do not seem to have borne much fruit in production, and still less in export production. Of manufactured exports of the islands there has always been a small showing. Textiles of the native fibers and products of the native loom have been in some demand in foreign markets. Cordage manufactures of Manila hemp in earlier years amounted to several hundred thousand dollars annually, while manufactured tobacco has represented a fairly constant trade throughout. With these exceptions of relatively little value, the exports have been agricultural and made up practically during the past half century of hemp, sugar, tobacco, coffee and copra, though the distribution of the aggregate exports among these five commodities has shown considerable fluctuation, arising from varying stages in the productive development of each industry and from other causes.

Hemp and sugar have been the leading features in the exports of the islands for the past half-century. The lead was slightly in favor of sugar in pre-Suez days, the two together representing over half of the ten million average total of the period, and in the increasing totals of succeeding years making up a larger proportion of the export trade. The lead of sugar before the opening of the canal was greatly increased during the following period down to 1885, embracing the greatest values and prosperity in the history of the industry, when average exports of sugar are nine million a year to five million for hemp in a total trade of slightly less than twenty million dollars. But thereafter to the end of the Spanish recorded period, hemp makes steady gains while sugar values decline in the unequal competition with the European beet product, and the averages of these years show hemp and sugar exports of about equal value, amounting to about seven and a half million each in a total that shows but slight increase over the earlier average. In the American period the heavy decline in the value of sugar exports combined with the unprecedented stimulation in hemp production has operated to end this earlier rivalry, and with the hemp average eighteen million while sugar is only a scant three million in a total of twenty-seven and a half million dollars, hemp exports now constitute two-thirds of the total and relegate sugar to the rank of a minor export.

Of these minor exports, tobacco in its combination of leaf and manufactured has been generally the chief, and has maintained a nearly uniform export value of about two million dollars throughout the fifty years. Coffee with its present virtual disappearance from the list of exports, in 1889, the banner year of its export values, amounted to nearly two million dollars;

while copra, the latest of the islands' chief exports to develop and dating its importance practically from the American period, has in the averages of that period a value of two and a half million making it of superior importance to tobacco and its manufactures and a close rival to sugar.

Among exports of still less importance is indigo, which, in the earlier years of the half-century represented annual values considerably exceeding a hundred thousand dollars, but this trade has since declined steadily to present insignificant proportions of but a few thousand dollars. Dyewood exports have had a somewhat similar experience, for many years after the opening of the Suez Canal being valued at considerably above a hundred thousand dollars also, but declining in recent years to about a third of that sum. Another export item is ilang-ilang oil, an essential oil, the product of a Philippine flowering tree, that finds high favor among the French perfumers, who in recent years have been the chief purchasers. Resins of the islands, variously classified as almaciga and copal, also figure in the export trade but neither ilang-ilang oil nor these varnish resins reach a value of a hundred thousand dollars; and though they represent an export asset of unknown possibilities in the future development of the islands' resources, are relatively negligible items in a survey of the past and present export trade.

The Philippines
the exclusive
source of supply.

Manila hemp merits peculiar prominence in a review of Philippine exports. It occupies a unique place among the products of the islands and enjoys a place in trade that other leading exports, such as tobacco, copra, sugar and coffee, cannot lay claim to. The commercial world has long since recognized its peculiar merits, as it has recognized the exclusive source of the product in giving it the name of the chief city of the archipelago. Other hems may be found possessing widely different qualities, which for the most part have drifted far from their original habitats and are profitably cultivated in widely separated areas, but Manila hemp after being an article of world commerce for the greater part of a century, and after being the object of many attempts at culture elsewhere, remains to this day exclusively the product of its native land and has become with the lapse of time the leading source of its export wealth.

Qualities which give the fiber
pre-eminence.

The qualities of Manila hemp that give it its unique position among the fibers of the world are its strength and durability. Maguey fiber has in some respects been found even superior and it has become an active rival for the Manila in many fields, but this rivalry of maguey is on the basis of the recognized general inferiority of a lower price, and a fiber possessing such excellent qualities of strength and resistance to decay to the extent of this Philippine fiber, guarantee for it a uniform and assured demand in the markets of the world.

Primitive character of the hemp
industry.

Another exceptional feature of this industry of the archipelago is the essentially primitive character of it. As hemp culture has been carried on from the beginning down to the present time it is perhaps one of the simplest sources of wealth ever practiced under the guise of agriculture. With an outlay of crude labor in starting a hemp plantation, a prolific nature furnishes the harvest for years and naked human strength, aided only by such primitive machinery as might be improvised on the spot, prepares the crop for the market. Such are the characteristic features of the hemp industry which mark it as peculiarly the industry of a primitive people and differentiate it widely from that of sugar—even as practiced in the Philippines.

Under these conditions of a natural monopoly in an exceptionally valuable product, produced from the abundance of nature with the most rudimentary outlay of capital and labor, it is to be anticipated that the hemp exports of the islands would be characterized by marked uniformity, showing none of the vicissitudes of its sister industries exposed to the hot competition of the outside world and handicapped by heavy outlays of capital or constant demands for intelligent supervision. This fact is borne out by the statistics.

Fifty years ago hemp exports did not amount to 20,000 tons; in the Growth of exports. present year, with a total of 121,637, they have increased more than six-fold, and a review of the annual figures for this half-century, in as far as we have them, shows them to be characterized by a very evenly distributed growth in trade. While there are irregularities from year to year they have but little bearing on the general increase. The most exceptional case is in 1890 when the trade falls off nearly half of that of preceding and succeeding years, but we learn from the British consul's report that this was due to a phenomenally dry season, and the lesser irregularities of other years are doubtless due to local and transitory conditions in a sheltered industry that is in the main progressing as a result of its natural opportunities.

By the end of the fifties exports had increased to 25,000 tons and they fluctuate around this figure for the Effect of the opening of the Suez Canal. next ten years. The opening of the Suez Canal makes 1870 an era in the hemp trade as it was in Oriental commerce generally. The opening of a shorter route to the European market seems responsible for the swell in hemp shipments to 40,000 tons, and this becomes the prevailing figure up to 1880. From 1880 to 1886 50,000 tons about represents the yearly trade. 1887 witnesses another marked advance when the trade amounts to 72,518 tons, and if we except the serious decline of 1890 above noted, the exports mount toward six figures as the end of the Spanish regime approaches.

In the American period this growth has been well sustained though naturally with some fluctuations in the earlier years. But the slightness of such export declines, Hemp production in the insurrectionary period. in view of the extensive disorganization of labor and commerce attending the insurrectionary agitations of the closing years of Spanish rule and the inauguration of the American era, is noteworthy and no doubt finds its explanation in the peculiarly elementary character of the industry, and the readiness with which it could be plied as a source of income even in troublous times. From 1901, however, exports react and since then a new record average has been established of about 125,000 tons per year, with unprecedented figures of 137,752 tons in 1903.

Factors in recent heavy production.

This large increase in recent years is no doubt in a measure attributable to the same causes that operated to minimize the declines of the insurrectionary period. There has been a general rush of labor to the hemp fields, which offered the surest and most immediate returns with a corresponding inflation of exports. But the present year shows a decline to 121,637 tons, and this is perhaps in some degree due to a restoration of the labor balance of the islands. With restored order and the growth of public confidence the laborer will naturally return to the rice field and other industries of the islands which, promising less immediate returns, have suffered more and are more dependent on peaceful conditions. The large decline in rice imports in the present year, indicating a corresponding increase in the domestic product, would seem to bear this out. The laborer seems to be turning again to his rice paddock now that he feels he can wait for months with confidence for his reward in lieu of the comparatively active life and more immediate returns of the hemp stripper. And while no serious decline from the present exports of hemp is to be anticipated, it would seem probable that with the rehabilitation of other industries more dependent on the reign of order, labor will gravitate more and more to them and the strides that hemp exports have made in the latter years of the past decade will be somewhat abated.

Rivalry of United States and United Kingdom in the hemp market.

In a review of hemp exports by countries it appears that for the past half-century the United States and the United Kingdom have held a practical monopoly throughout. An exception is to be found in what seems to have been a Hongkong trans-shipment trade which has figured continuously to a greater or less degree, but which from 1879 assumes considerable proportions, increases to nearly a third of the total in 1892, but in recent years has again declined to small figures and may be considered throughout as but an equivocal and subsidiary feature in this Anglo-Saxon monopoly of Philippine hemp exports for the past half-century.

The relative share in this trade held by the United States and the United Kingdom has been subject to wide fluctuations. In the closing fifties and until 1861 the preponderance of the United States was great, ranging from three to nine times the exports credited to the United Kingdom. With the latter year, however, Great Britain suddenly takes the lead and retains it by small odds for the next two years. This great shifting of the trade from the United States is coincident with the Civil War and is doubtless due to that. In 1864 the United States again forges to the front and in 1865, 1866 and 1867 is credited with three times the volume of exports to the British.

It would seem that the opening of the Suez Canal operated against the United States in this trade, at least in the interval of five years embracing that event for which figures are not available, the United States loses her earlier pre-eminence, and though she still generally leads down to 1890 it is by a narrow margin. In the greatly reduced total of 1890 the United States falls far behind Great Britain and remains so for the three succeeding years. In 1894 American trade is again slightly in the lead, but there is absence of official data for entering into a discussion of the trade in the closing years of Spanish rule, while there is little of significance in the first American figures.

The opening of the Suez Canal and after.

In 1900 the situation becomes clearer with the United Kingdom in receipt of more than half the total and the United States with less than half the trade of the British,—proportions that become even more disparaging to American trade in the next year. The Act of March 8, 1902, by giving to the American importer the benefit of the export duty, has operated to alter this situation from that year to the present, giving to the United States a distinct lead in each year. In this manner ends a half-century review of the hemp trade of the Philippines, with these two countries still monopolizing the exports of this excellent fiber, as at the beginning, and engaged in the keenest rivalry for the possession of the islands' output. The purpose of the legislation above referred to was, by giving the American cordage manufacturer an advantage in direct purchases of hemp from the Philippines to put an end to the anomaly of a British market for the supplying of the United States with this product of her dependency, and to save the American the expense of trans-shipment and the fees of the British middle-man.

Past and present of the British hemp market for American supply.

This dependence of the American manufacturer on British stores of hemp is a condition of long standing, and no doubt the existence of these stores is the outgrowth of the traditional British supremacy in the Philippine export trade. We find considerable American purchases of Manila hemp in the British market as far back as 1885, and it is probable that this dependence dates from the serious decline in American supremacy in the hemp export trade of the islands previously referred to as coincident with the opening of the Suez Canal. In 1892 nearly half of the raw hemp imports of the United States came from the United Kingdom, and in succeeding years this country is an important source of American supply, furnishing in 1901 considerably more than that received direct from the Philippines and evoking in the next year the legislation above referred to. With the passage of this legislation American purchases in the British market have declined to an inconsiderable part of the total imports, and no doubt with the strengthening of commercial relations between the United States and the islands, this purchase of hemp at second-hand with unreasonable profit to the British trader will eventually become a thing of the past.

Exports of manufactured hemp.

Exports of hemp manufactures figure from the beginning of the half-century under review, and true to economic laws figure far more prominently in earlier years than at present. With the development of the industrial system in the rest of the world the foreign demand has been more and more for the raw material than for the islanders' primitive manufactures, and a trade in the manufactured fiber that in 1860 had a value of considerably over a quarter of a million has steadily declined until these exports in recent years scarcely amount to $25,000. In those early years the manufactured fiber represented as high as a seventh of the total value of hemp exports, but beside the $20,944,177 worth of raw hemp exports in the present year the manufactures are a negligible detail.

The prices of hemp throughout the fifty years present little of note, and with the annual fluctuations to be anticipated show a general uniformity as marked as has been the progressive growth in production. The highest point reached in the Spanish regime is coincident with the very short crop of 1890. Prices have ruled much higher since American occupation and no doubt this furnishes an additional reason for the rush of labor to the hemp fields as evidenced by the large increase in exports.

The outlook for this leading export of the islands is decidedly favorable. The fiber still enjoys its exclusive position in the markets of the world and the Philippines the exclusive production of it. The demand for a fiber of its exceptional strength and durability is assured, and the indications are that with uncultivated lands in the islands still adapted to its culture, future exports will continue to grow as the trade has grown throughout the past. There is but one disturbing factor and that lies in the deterioration of the quality of the fiber due to careless and bad methods in its preparation for market, tending to degrade its exceptional possibilities to a competitive level with inferior fibers. This is not a new evil, and as far back as 1894 we find the British consul alluding to the deterioration in quality and the united action of the merchants to force the producers to reform their methods and produce a higher grade. In recent years there has been a recurrence of this evil in such serious form as to receive the attention of the government. There is no doubt that the future of the industry may be gravely affected if the reputation of the fiber is persistently compromised by careless preparation for the market. But in view of the traditional American policy of non-interference in such matters, the government has not seen fit to resort to the drastic methods used by Spain under similar circumstances. The condition, however, will doubtless be energetically met by the merchants as in the past, and there is even the promise of better things ahead for the industry in the invention of a machine that will greatly improve the present method of stripping the fiber and at the same time yield a much superior product,—results which if realized will mark a new era in the production of hemp and increase exports beyond all records of the past.

The sugar industry contrasted with that of hemp.

In a historical review of the sugar industry of the Philippines in the light of its export trade we are confronted by figures altogether different,—the outgrowth of conditions altogether different,—from those of hemp. While hemp with the strong position of a natural monopoly grew with a steadily increasing output from year to year, the sugar of the islands with no other distinction in the markets of the world than the discrediting one of its generally inferior quality, has shared to the full in the losing struggle that has been the lot of cane sugar throughout the world during the past quarter of a century, and besides has suffered from the many changes of conditions peculiar to the Philippines, which have combined to make the history of the industry in more recent times a gloomy one indeed; and the export figures amply bear out the general report of the Philippine sugar industry being in a serious state of decadence.

Prosperity of industry in earlier days.

In earlier days, however, when beet sugar was yet unknown as a factor in the world market, when the cane product of tropical countries had no competition and when crude and wasteful methods were the rule,—it was then that the Philippine industry prospered. But with the coming of the powerful and unequal competition of European bounty-fed sugars that has all but forced into bankruptcy so many tropical sugar producing countries, the Philippine industry lingered on in a struggle for existence. Growth ceased, the old primitive and wasteful methods largely persisted in a competition grown so keen that only the greatest economy in production made success possible, and the way was paved for the collapse that has overtaken the industry in the past few years.

The period 1855 to 1870 seems to have been a prosperous one for the Filipino sugar producer. Prices ruled higher than during any subsequent period though there was but slight increase in exports, which ranged from about forty to fifty thousand tons throughout. One reason for this slight response to the stimulus of good prices is doubtless to be found in the remoteness of the Philippines from the sugar consuming centers of the world. With the opening of the Suez Canal this remoteness in a large measure vanished, and exports leaping very soon to a hundred thousand tons almost double that figure within ten years of the opening of the new highway. From the late sixties to the early eighties sugar exports had quadrupled, with prices fairly constant at about three cents a pound and this may be deemed the golden era of the sugar industry of the Philippines.

The exports of the early eighties were in the neighborhood of 200,000 tons, but in the meantime changes were coming about on the other side of the world to set a limit to the further expansion of the Philippine industry. Germany was nearly doubling her exports of beet sugar yearly and paving the way to what is known as the sugar crisis of 1885, and to the establishment of a new low record of prices which would prove disastrous to the insular industry and make the succeeding years a struggle for existence.

Prices had begun to fall before 1885, and the three succeeding years, according to consular reports, were characterized by great depression in the industry with further declines in prices and persistently diminishing exports. Reaction followed and prices and exports fluctuated throughout the closing years of Spanish rule, but never again reached the figures that prevailed prior to 1880, and though much has been said of the heavy exports of 1893 the banner year of the industry amounting to 257,389 tons, it should be stated that in a crop as uncertain as sugar, which often shows a doubling or halving of exports due to climatic conditions, the significance of a single year's figures are to be discounted. An averaging of quinquennial periods from 1880 shows that while there was a slight increase down to the close of the Spanish regime it was relatively slight, and 200,000 tons may be taken as a rough but fair approximation of the annual trade throughout.

We thus have a summing up of the industry in three stages: a period of exceptional prices but of small exports in pre-Suez days; a period of remunerative prices, great activity, and rapid growth under the stimulus of access to the world markets—not yet forfeited by over-production; and a period of low prices for fifteen years with a nominal increase in exports during which the industry finds it yearly harder with its primitive methods and low-grade product to hold its own in the world market.

In the stress of hot competition that the sugar industry of the world has undergone since 1885, the preponderating weight of scientific invention and improved methods seems to have been on the side of beet sugar in the matter of economic production. While cane sugar has also made advances in this respect the fact that it is in the main a product of tropical and less progressive peoples explains no doubt the slower progress that improved methods have made in this branch of the industry. In this particular it would seem that the Philippines have lagged behind all other tropical countries. At least it appears that in this era of competition, when economic production grew paramount, the old stone mill with its extraction of forty per cent of the weight of the cane in juice and the old open kettle with its distinctly Philippine and low grade product still remained large factors in the industry. The fact that Philippine sugar production was able to hold its own after 1885—and even make slight gains—under such a handicap of antiquated methods is only to be explained on the basis of the cheapness of labor, which made a measure of profit still possible and saved the industry from extinction or the alternative necessity of the extensive inauguration of the improved methods of more progressive countries.

Such was the condition of the Philippine sugar industry as inherited by the United States in 1898,—an industry operating with antiquated equipment and the crudest methods in competition with modern science and progress, engaged in a losing struggle for nearly two decades, and subsisting only through labor conditions as oriental and primitive as its equipment. If to this we add that other American heritage from Spain of insurrectionary disorder and other ills of plague and famine that have since afflicted the islands, we find no difficulty in explaining the collapse of the Philippine sugar industry in American times.

This collapse as evidenced by the export figures amounts to a shrinkage from the average of 200,000 tons of the closing decades of Spanish rule to exports in American occupation that have not amounted in any year to half this amount, and we must go back thirty years in the industry, in the earliest years of the opening of the Suez Canal, to find an analogous period in the smallness of the islands' sugar production.

European competition and Philippine methods of production.

The advent of beet sugar competition.

Stagnation of industry in closing Spanish period.

Collapse of the industry in the American period.

Causes of heavy declines in exports.

This shrinkage of over half in sugar exports coincident with American occupation has been generally credited to insurrectionary disorders. Much stress has been laid on the actual destruction of sugar plants and equipment; great weight has been attributed and no doubt justly to the scourge of rinderpest leaving the islands without draft animals; but in view of the general condition of the industry above stated it would seem that the ultimate reason lies deeper and that these, however immediately cogent, are only incidental and subsidiary to it.

With the industry characterized by primitive and wasteful methods and based on oriental labor conditions and yet for a period of years scarcely more than holding its own against the bounty-fed and scientifically produced article of Europe, it is easy to see how with any disturbance of labor conditions it must inevitably perish. The advent of the United States in the islands is considered to have marked a new political era, but that it should at the same time inaugurate a new industrial era was inevitable. That the new era should manifest itself most forcibly in the primitive, but at the same time the most highly organized industry of the islands, was only natural; and that its effect should be disastrous is unfortunate but it is the general penalty that extreme cases for regeneration must be preceded by destruction, and the Philippine sugar industry seems simply to be undergoing the drastic preliminaries of a reorganization on a modern basis.

Increased wages and the sugar industry.

From all sides comes the report that wages have doubled in the islands under American rule. On the other hand a study of sugar exports shows no such increase in prices and for result we have the above noted shrinkage in exports to half their former volume. Consular reports and other information for the years succeeding 1885 are all to the general effect that sugar, once a profitable industry, no longer pays more at best than a bare margin above cost of production and interest on investment, and the fact of the slight increase in exports would seem to indicate that the planter found little encouragement to extend his acres and increase his output, but was rather merely clinging on to his investment—keeping his machinery in order and his land from growing up in brush—while he hoped and waited for better times.

With the so-called "demoralization of labor" attending the American occupation that perhaps might be better named "increase in wages," the sugar planter has found it impossible to cling longer to his antiquated method of production and keep his mill going. There is not enough margin of profit with which to meet the new scale of wages, hence the dismantled mills and over-grown plantations frequently referred to, with the corresponding shrinkage in exports. While no doubt there were haciendas devastated during the insurrection and there was a scarcity of carabao to start the old mills revolving again, the real cause of the situation seems to be economic and the future of the Philippine sugar industry depends on its reorganization upon a modern basis to meet the new standard of wages.

That Philippine sugar cane would be entirely adequate under other conditions to this increased demand upon its output and could compete with the beet and cane product of other countries, admits of no doubt. In an interesting survey of the Philippine industry by United States Consul Webb in 1889, he states that with the stone and wooden mills of the islands only about forty per cent of the weight of the cane is expressed in juice, and shows how the low grade Philippine sugar could be doubled in value by the use of the improved methods of his day. By all accounts the conditions which he described have not since greatly mended, and it is obvious that between the sugar that is thus burned up in the bagasse, and what is lost by unintelligent production of what is one of the lowest grade sugars on the world market, there would be ample to pay the laborer his increased wage as well as to restore the industry to some measure of its former prosperity.

Possibilities of Philippine sugar cane under modern conditions.

Among the countries who have been purchasers of Philippine sugar in the past half century the United States and the United Kingdom occupy the most conspicuous position, as was the case in the hemp trade. In the earliest years the exports to the United Kingdom were much in excess of those to the United States; Australasian trade being in years immediately following 1855 generally second to the British. But Australia loses continuous importance after 1862 and gives place to the United States, figuring at irregular intervals during the next twenty years and virtually disappearing with the extension of Australian sugar production. The exports to the United States suffer a slight temporary decline during the war period of 1861-1863, to rise again to about the old level in 1864; but British trade is still dominant, and not until in 1873, or in the interval between that year and 1867, for which no official figures are available, does that active competition between the two countries begin, which has figured so largely in Philippine sugar exports. The cause of this great increase in American purchases is obscure, but was perhaps in some measure due to the reduction of the heavy war tax on imported sugar which took place at about that time.

Sugar exports to United States and United Kingdom.

British and American trade is well balanced from 1873 to 1880, and the two countries take very nearly all of the exports. From the latter year the British sugar purchases suffer a decline and for ten years, with the single exception of 1881, they take a subordinate place while the cargoes for America represent generally more than half the total exports and amount to over 100,000 tons in most years.

Effect of McKinley tariff on exports to United States.

1890 witnesses a transposition of the lead, with a slight reaction in favor of the United Kingdom and a drop to less than forty thousand tons purchased by the United States. This sudden decline was due to the McKinley act of that year placing sugar on the free list (with a bounty on the domestic product), under which the American importer was free to purchase in all markets at equal terms whereas he had previously been taxed according to the quality. The immediate effect was that the low grade sugar of the Philippines, which had enjoyed the quasi-protection of a lower import duty, was abandoned for the superior product of the Dutch East Indies and Philippine sugar lost a market of twenty years standing and has never since regained it. American purchases were but a paltry ten thousand tons of the 257,389 tons exported in the banner year 1893, and in the first years of the reduced figures of American times took even smaller quantities though in 1903 and 1904 there is a reaction and the United States is credited with about a third of the islands' total sugar exports.

Exports to United Kingdom in recent years.

The United Kingdom, as has been stated, showed an increased interest in Philippine sugar in 1890 and in the next few years again becomes—as she was in the opening years of the half-century under review—the leading country in the trade, with purchases ranging from a third in intervening years to more than a half of the unprecedented exports of 1893. Her trade, however, seems to have undergone another decline in the succeeding unrecorded period of the closing years of Spanish rule, and in American times the British purchases of Philippine sugar have virtually ceased. All indications seem to point to the final disappearance of this long established and important market for the islands' product, but without seeking for reasons for this it is enough to say that it is quite in line with the general trend of the British trade. Thirty-five years ago three-fourths of British consumption was cane sugar and the United Kingdom was a power in the tropical trade, but with the development of beet sugar nearer home she seems to have turned more and more from her older sources of supply to the new and in recent years cane sugar has furnished only about ten per cent of her needs.

This shifting of the destination of Philippine sugar from these two countries which formerly took the bulk of it, calls attention to the new market that has been found for it in recent times in the Orient. It has been seen how American tariff legislation operated to disturb the old and established demand in the United States, and probably freight rates have been a factor in the British patronage of European sources of supply. The sugar exports to these countries that have since been taken over by near-by demands in the East is due, it has been said, to a recent and surprising development in a taste for sugar by the oriental. However this may be, the figures show that China was not a direct importer of Philippine sugar with any regularity until the American occupation, and Japan's imports become constant and considerable only after 1890, growing rapidly in importance and showing an average of about 25,000 tons in recent times.

Conspicuous among the minor takers of Philippine sugar throughout the past seems to have been Chinese, Japanese and Hongkong trade.

Hongkong, though lost under the guise of "British Possessions," or China, according to the system of Spanish classification at different periods. This trade, however, does not assume any relative importance until in 1885. From that year down to the present amid the various changes and declines of American and British trade, these shipments have presented a very constant figure of about 35,000 tons annually, and amounting to 28,605 tons in the present year are the leading feature in the total. There is reason to believe that the most of this sugar was simply in transit for Chinese consumption, as these exports together with those for Japan and the direct shipments to China have made up the great bulk of the trade during American occupation, though to a less degree in the past two years owing to the increased shipments to the United States previously referred to. Thus it may be said in general terms that from 1885 Philippine sugar has been strengthening its position in the Oriental market, and with the decline of the older Anglo-Saxon demand has intrenched itself in recent years nearer home.

Distribution of exports in 1904. Of the exports of the present year the United States is credited with slightly less than a third, Hongkong with a little above a third, while the remainder is nearly equally divided between Chinese direct shipments and Japan. Two-thirds of the sugar trade is therefore Oriental at the present time, and it was even more largely so prior to 1903. The increased shipments to the United States in the past two years seem to have been of the nature of experiments, and unsuccessful experiments, as brought out in the recent hearings before the Ways and Means Committee of the House. But with this large field and rapidly increasing demand for sugar in the East, it seems probable that freight rates and the already established use there of the lower grade Philippine sugar will become factors in the continuance of the present current of exports to these newly opened and near-by markets. The experiments above referred to are too recent for statistical inferences to be ventured upon with much confidence, but it may be worthy of note that in the data available for only two years, United States imports in the present year show a slight decline from those of the first year under tariff concessions in total sugar exports that show a slight increase, and such evidence as this offers goes to confirm the above statements of the unsuccessful character of these recent shipments to America, as well as the probability that Philippine sugar is destined for the future to find its best market in the orient.

The future of the sugar industry. The future of the Philippine sugar industry, in spite of the discouraging figures presented during American occupation, is not without its encouraging aspects. It is quite probable that the industry will never again figure as the leading source of the islands' export wealth, as it did prior to the last decade of the Spanish occupation. The lead taken from that time by hemp which has since grown to represent two-thirds of the total exports of the islands, is too strongly rooted in the exceptional nature of the commodity to ever again suffer serious rivalry from sugar. But that there will be a reaction from the present desperate condition of the industry and that it will ultimately be placed on an even more prosperous basis than during the closing years of the Spanish regime, is not only a matter for hope but for reasonable anticipation. The recovery of the industry from its present unfortunate condition may not be until many years and a hard struggle, especially if no aid is extended to it, but so long as sugar cane flourishes in Negros, Panay and Batangas as it does, the extinction of the industry by force of untoward conditions in the face of its natural advantages seems scarcely possible.

A very encouraging factor in the situation is the result of the Brussels Convention in putting an end to the artificial advantages given beet sugar under the bounty system of Europe. This does away with the disadvantage under which cane sugar has labored for many years, which arrested the development of the Philippine industry in the latter years of Spanish rule and which paved the way to its collapse in present times. At no time since the competition of beet sugar became a factor has the outlook of the cane industry of the world been brighter than it is at present.

It is a well-known fact that the tropical cane sugar producer, under the disadvantages of cruder methods but with the benefit of a cheap labor market, is in a position to meet the beet sugar manufacturer with his highly organized art and asks only for a fair field and no favor. The Brussels Convention would have given a great impulse to the Philippine industry in the eighties and nineties, but, as has been previously said, conditions are no longer the same. The cheap labor market has undergone a change in American times, and may be expected to show further advances under the influence of the higher American ideals and standards of living more and more down among the people. For this reason the changes produced by the Brussels Convention seem scarcely adequate even to put the industry upon a basis to exist under its new conditions, still less to stimulate it to the measure of its former productiveness. A realization of this by the friends of the islands and those with a keen sense of our national honor being pledged to see that the archipelago and its industries fare at least as well as under Spanish rule has led them to turn elsewhere for a further stimulus to rehabilitate the suffering industry.

Modern methods essential to modern wages.

As has been previously stated, this rehabilitation can only come through a reorganization of the industry on modern lines that will save present waste to meet advancing wages. The burning of a large part of the yield in the bagasse, and the production of one of the most inferior sugars of commerce when care and additional capital would transform it into a superior quality, are things that must end in the face of wages that are beginning to cease to be tropical and oriental.

Capital the condition of a reorganized industry.

For this reorganization a large outlay of capital is necessary. Much of the existing plantation equipment must be discarded, and a general remodelling take place in an industry that under modern conditions requires an excessive capitalization for economic production. This need of capital was a constant cry in Spanish times, and the rates of interest exacted from an industry so precariously situated absorbed what should have been its legitimate profits. This seems to be the condition today. We hear of short loans at enormous rates, and of long loans for improvements practically unobtainable for an industry that is at present in such a precarious condition.

Tariff concessions as a means to restore the industry.

The relief for such a state of affairs is to be found in measures for the restoration of confidence in the industry, and thus far the only adequate method offered lies in the extension of further tariff concessions to Philippine sugar, thus granting it an assured profit in the world market, interesting the capitalist, reassuring the money-lender and making possible the payment of higher wages by the planter, and the installation of improved machinery and inauguration of economic production.

The opposition to this measure considered.

This plan seems to meet with general approbation apart from the American sugar producer, whose supersensitiveness of the results in a sharing of the protection he enjoys, and whose fears at the shadow of a possible competition are the natural consequence of the special privileges he has long enjoyed. But while it is not necessary to inquire into the merits of his overdrawn apprehensions of the pressure of the Philippine product upon American sugar, it may be noted that the present United States consumption of foreign sugar is more than six times the total exports of the archipelago in its best year, and about twenty times the present exports, while on the other hand there is the reasonable assumption that under further tariff concessions the demands of the oriental market will still be a factor in the appropriation of the islands' exports, but with the benefit of higher prices to the producer. With every reasonable allowance for an exceptional development in the Philippine sugar industry as the outcome of tariff favors extended to it, it is difficult to conceive how it could increase its output so as to take the place of present American consumption of foreign sugars and begin to press upon the domestic product within the generation which has been set as the probationary period of American occupation, and to the next generation, who will have to pass upon the ultimate destiny of the islands it seems we may leave the present fears of the American sugar interests.

In the meantime the figures under review raise an immediate question. Analogy in the present situation to the earlier Spanish policy. Many criticisms have been made of the Spanish policy in the islands and one has been of that policy which operated to discourage their industrial development and the growth of manufactures that would militate in any way against those of the mother country. In the face of these export figures in American times and the above-mentioned opposition, the question is whether with American responsibility for the welfare of the islands, it will be American policy, at the demand of powerful domestic interests, to sacrifice these rich natural possibilities of the islands to the vague fears of these interests, and let the sugar industry sink still farther below the moderate degree of prosperity and productiveness enjoyed under Spain.

Tobacco an object of special government attention in earlier years.

ing been during its development under the special care of the government and its protege to a degree that has

The tobacco industry of the Philippines has enjoyed the unique, but not very enviable, distinction of hav-been the lot of no other insular industry. From 1781, for a period of one hundred and one years, the industry was a government monopoly, and its growth a matter of constant attention through official channels. There is the distinction, however, between this form of earlier governmental patronage of an industry and the modern one of tariff benefits, that the product and not the producer was the object of solicitude, but though the object was to powerfully stimulate production, it may be questioned whether the tobacco industry even from the standpoint of production showed any appreciable gain through this forced development under the monopoly above what there might have been under free conditions.

The origin of the monopoly. The tobacco monopoly of the Philippines owed its start and development to fiscal needs. In earlier centuries the Philippines were a dependency of New Spain or Mexico, and the insular administration was never self-supporting. It seems to have been of the nature of an outpost of the Spanish colonial system, existing largely for the benefit of those favored with an assignment there and was a constant charge upon the Mexican exchequer.

An earner of revenue. At first but another device for the reduction of the customary revenue shortage, the monopoly after the declaration of Mexican independence in 1821 lent itself readily to the new demand for a self-supporting administration, and early became an important fiscal asset of the islands. It is stated that revenue from this source, amounting to but $39,000 in 1785 had in 1844 increased to two millions and a half, and at the abolition of the monopoly in 1882 was paying half of the expenses of the insular government.

Its practical operation. The monopoly in production was made to apply only to the northern provinces of Luzon, the sources of the best grades of Philippine tobacco, and one phase of the injustice of the system lay in its being a form of taxation to fall in the first instance and most heavily on this limited section. But the most pronounced hardship lay not so much in this undistributed burden as in the details of oppression by which the system operated. Compulsory labor was inaugurated and superintended by an army of officials with a complete system of surveillance a state of semi-slavery soon existed. In the early years of the nineteenth century open revolt was an outcome of the drastic and at that time new measures for stimulating production by the exaction of fixed quantities of tobacco from the natives under rigidly enforced penalties. In the course of time and with the establishment of the burdensome system as a part of the life of the people, both submission and production grew; manufactures increased and the government cigar makers prospered, while the revenues flourished. The welfare of the producer, however, received little or no consideration and forced to produce both in quality and quantity up to the government standard he was paid according to the government standard, which one writer states was often as low as twenty to thirty per cent of the market value, and his pay according to the financial condition of the government was in a depreciated scrip, only to be cashed at a further reduction.

The monopoly fully realized the purpose of its existence as a revenue Its end in 1882. earner, and probably forced somewhat an industry that might have grown more slowly among the easy going natives; but as early as 1871 there was a growing official recognition that the system and its wrongs must be done away with, and though the heavy loss of revenue involved and uncertainty as to the measures necessary to meet it, combined with interested opposition, operated to delay action for many years, January 1, 1883 at length witnessed the tobacco industry on a free basis after a century of forced production and government control.

The official tobacco export figures Irregularity and uncertainty of official figures during the monopoly. of the monopoly period are so irregular as to defy analysis and taken in connection with collateral evidence furnished by the British consul, a doubt is left as to whether they represent the total exports of the islands. The wide fluctuations in volume from year to year no doubt arise from the fact that the total stock of the islands was held in the government warehouses, with the market subject to manipulation, and sales dependent on the exigencies of the government. The yearly export figures therefore apart from the doubt of their being complete returns, are not to be fully relied upon and bear little of the relation to annual production that characterizes normal trade conditions.

With these qualifications concerning the official figures of the monopoly period it may be stated that from 1855 Spain was the largest taker of Philippine leaf tobacco, as she has been through the free period and down to the present year. The United Kingdom seems to have been the only other purchaser of leaf down to 1873, and her imports were in irregular quantities and only intermittent during this time. With that year another market for Philippine leaf appears in what is variously designated as "British Possessions" British East Indies or China, according to the period under consideration, though the disappearance of exports to Spain in 1877, 1879, 1880 and 1881, together with the general irregularity of the figures, indicate conditions of trade that make close analysis practically impossible.

Monopoly exports of manufactured
tobacco.

The export figures of manufactured tobacco are somewhat clearer. With reports made variously in thousands of cigars, in boxes and in kilos, and with an occasional entire absence of quantities, the generally doubtful value of quantities in this class of tobacco becomes in the present instance of no value. The total annual values, however, show considerable uniformity and are fairly consistent with the subsequent free period, with an average of slightly less than a million dollars annually and showing a little increase toward the close of the monopoly. This trade was more widely distributed than that of leaf and Spain participated very slightly in it. British East Indies has the lead throughout and in the closing years of the monopoly takes practically all these exports. China took large quantities in the years immediately succeeding 1855, but this trade had a rapid decline and virtually disappeared by 1875. Australasia was also a large importer down to 1862, but in few years thereafter and then only in small amounts. The United Kingdom though in these early years an importer to a somewhat smaller extent, remains longer in the field than China and Australasia. Her trade also shows ultimate decline with the result above stated, that in the later seventies the exports of manufactured tobacco were practically taken up by British East Indies.

Abnormal export figures during the transition period.

The export figures of both leaf and manufactured tobacco during 1880-1884, the years immediately preceding and succeeding the abolition of the monopoly, show such extreme fluctuations as might be expected in a transition period of this significance to the trade. One writer tells of extensive manipulation of the market by the government, and the problem before the administration of disposing of its warehouse stock preparatory to going out of business, combined with schemes for auction sales, explain the unreliability of the figures in these years.

1885 may be taken as the date when the disturbances of the transition period disappear and the date for the beginning of the analysis of export figures under the normal conditions of free production and a free trade.

The leaf trade opening with exports of 12,855,858 pounds in 1885, shows a general increase, and in 1892, the best year since monopoly times, reaches 26,755,841 pounds. In American years these exports show a slight decline in quinquennial average and 20,000,000 pounds may be taken as the leaf export trade of recent years.

Leaf exports under free conditions still follow the channels of tradition, and Spain continues to absorb the great bulk of the total, though there is a general decline in the proportion of her purchases down to the present. In 1885-1889 she took nearly nine-tenths of the whole, but in the next five years her relative purchases of the insular leaf were less, while in the American period her share has been only seventy per cent with also an absolute decline in her purchases.

The leaf trade with British East Indies noted as appearing in 1873, was between 1885 and 1887 second in importance to that of Spain, and presented an annual average of nearly three-quarters of a million pounds. Under the country classification beginning with 1888, however, most of these shipments are credited to China, including Hongkong, which in American times has but a small proportion of the trade. The United Kingdom, with a historical place in this trade shows among some erratic yearly figures an average of approximately a half-million pounds during the Spanish decade, but from 1901 her purchases suffer a heavy and continual decrease and in the present year amount to but 17,840 pounds. French East Indies as a market for the Philippine leaf has its beginnings in 1885, and shows a rapid increase in the next few years with totals of about 400,000 pounds, but shipments disappear in 1894 and in American times are either absent or very small. A new factor, however, in the islands' export market to offset these losses has appeared in Austria-Hungary, which has no place in Spanish figures, but has in recent years been a purchaser of Philippine leaf through her state monopoly, second only in importance to that of Spain. These purchases aggregating four and a half millions in 1900, in succeeding years are between two and four millions but show a decline in 1904 to 1,303,640 pounds.

Leaf exports by countries under free conditions.

The United States
as a purchaser of Philippine leaf.

The United States the largest world producer of tobacco and with a market only for special foreign grades, has quite naturally figured to no extent in this trade. A minor exception is, however, to be noted in the year 1902 when she is credited with 235,420 pounds in a trade that in previous years did not exceed 5,000 pounds; but as brought out in the recent hearings before the Ways and Means Committee of the House these figures represent experimental shipments in anticipation of an improved market due to tariff legislation, and proved so unsatisfactory that the bulk was re-shipped to the Philippines. A drop in these exports to 9,168 in the succeeding year and their total disappearance in 1904 would seem to confirm this.

Exports of manufactured tobacco
under free conditions.

The total exports of manufactured tobacco since 1885 are characterized by great uniformity, remaining close to a million dollars in value throughout, the only noteworthy exception being those of the year 1901, when values reach $1,883,456. In fact the striking feature of these exports is their uniform value for the past half-century. While more irregularities are to be noted from year to year during the monopoly period, no doubt due to market manipulation and the carrying over of annual production, it is singular that viewed as a whole there has been only a barely perceptible increase in the islands' manufactured tobacco for the world market in the past fifty years.

The Orient as a consumer.

"British Possessions," otherwise Singapore and Hongkong, continue to be the leading importers of Philippine manufactured tobacco that they were in the closing years of the monopoly. This becomes largely Chinese trade from 1888-1894, and with the substitution of British East Indies and Hongkong in the American period, still hold this foremost place. This lead, however, that represents almost the total exports in the closing seventies, shows a falling off during 1885-1889, and during the next five years this oriental market takes only about half, though from 1900 there is a slight increase in the proportion.

Exports to the United Kingdom.

The decline noted in British imports toward the end of the monopoly shows since then a general reaction, but much irregularity, with an average of about $100,000 down to the American period. In the heavy exports of 1901 the United Kingdom is credited with manufactured tobacco valued at $601,164, and with about a third of this sum in preceding and succeeding years, but with credits of $100,044 in 1903 and $94,355 in the present year she seems to be falling back to her figures under Spanish rule.

Spain who seems to have been a consumer of Philippine leaf only in monopoly days, from 1885 becomes an importer of the manufactured article to the value of about fifty thousand dollars yearly, with the exception of the phenomenal sum of $430,791 in 1888, and some small irregularities in other years. Spanish imports show a decline from this average in 1900 and 1901, and in succeeding years have ceased to be of any weight in the trade, amounting to but $5,811 in 1904.

In the confused state of the figures for the transition period the United States is credited with manufactured tobacco exports of the unparalleled value of $960,091 in 1880, and her share in the trade was generally higher in the monopoly period than it has been since, though never approaching even a quarter of this sum in but one year. The largest shipments credited to her under free conditions were in 1889 and amounted to $17,559; yet this is an exceptionally large sum, and in most years the trade does not amount to $5,000. 1902 is the banner year of United States imports of the manufactured product in the American period showing values of $11,006, due no doubt to favorable tariff legislation of that year, but these figures have not been maintained and the figures for this year are only $1,037.

Among new factors in this trade worthy of mention are China and Australasia. This country figured largely in manufactured tobacco exports from 1855, but had about disappeared before the end of the monopoly. Australasia figures only intermittently in the trade from 1885, to reappear continuously in American times. In the large figures of 1901 Australasia was a purchaser to the extent of $399,664 and in succeeding years her credits have been very near to $92,037—her figures for the present year.

In a general survey of the tobacco industry as it now exists, the manufactured product presents little of special note beyond the fact previously referred to, of practically stationary exports for the past fifty years. This, however, does not indicate that production has made no progress. On the contrary it seems probable factured tobacco.

Manufactured exports virtually stationary for that domestic consumption has made great increases under free conditions. It is said that at present so general is the use of the cigar and cigarette among the islanders that six-sevenths of the population aid in a local consumption that exceeds half the tobacco production of the islands; and in the face of such a demand stationary exports would be consistent with enormous increases in the manufactured tobacco during the half-century. Why manufactured tobacco exports have not increased would seem to depend on economic and other questions in an industry of which the native leaf forms but a relatively small part of the cost. It is to be noted that in those countries which are the heaviest consumers of Philippine tobacco and where the taste and demand for it are most fully developed, the Regie system prevails and the demand is rather for the leaf to the exclusion of the manufactured, and where the government monopoly does not prevail the general policy is to give the advantage to the raw material, and thus place at a disadvantage all but the highest grade wares,—a distinction that the Philippine product can scarcely claim. A review of the leaf exports from 1885 in comparison with values brings to light the fact that though exports have increased two-thirds, the actual value of the trade is now less than it was ^{Declines in prices of leaf tobacco.} twenty years ago, while a study of intervening years reveals a general falling off in the pound price of the leaf*. This is the depressing feature of the present state of the industry, and has been attributed to a gradual deterioration in quality with free production and the absence of the exactions of the monopoly for a high grade product from the natives. This explanation seems reasonable but causes are generally easier to discover than cures, and this is especially true of an industry almost entirely in the hands of the independent small producer, the most inaccessible of all producers. The depression of low prices seems to be upon the industry and it no doubt explains to a large degree the decline in export figures since the banner year 1892.

Infant industry founded on pre-existing usefulness of cocoanut palm. Copra production is the youngest of the islands' industries to reach a considerable degree of export importance though the cocoanut palm in the Philippines, as in most tropical countries, has always played an important part in the domestic economy of the people. In fact the present prominence of the dried meat of the cocoanut as an article of commerce is a growth of recent years, and the rapid increase in the islands' exports of the commodity has no doubt depended on the wide distribution of the tree and the profusion with which it has been grown to supply the islanders' domestic needs. It has been the source of tuba, the distinctive beverage of the Philippines, while the oil from the nut has had an extensive use both for culinary and illuminating purposes, and this domestic usefulness has no doubt led to a fostering of the growth of the tree to an extent that left a large surplus of production for export when the foreign manufacturers of cocoanut products in the closing years of the last century suddenly created a great and apparently permanent market for the dried meat of the nut. Confirmation of this already existing supply is found in consular reports, in which it is stated that the limit of exports is not the want of nuts but of hands to gather them, and this taken in connection with large increases in the planting of trees in the province of Laguna, the leading copra district of the islands as evidenced by figures published in the recent census of the Philippines, would seem to indicate that the possibilities of this industry are great, and that exports of copra will continue to grow in importance as they have in the past.

*In an official statement from the Insular Collector of Customs received just before going to press, it is said that leaf tobacco exports have been subject to systematic undervaluation by shippers to the extent of about fifty per cent. This would correspondingly enhance the official values given; but inasmuch as this undervaluation is said to have prevailed also in Spanish times, the general decline in prices above noted and other comparative statements are not affected.

Not separately reported and demand limited in Spanish times.

Copra was not separately reported in Spanish times, and the small export quantities that then supplied the demand are presumably included under cocoanuts, an item which until 1888, does not amount to as much as a hundred thousand dollars. In 1892 this trade reaches three-quarters of a million dollars in value, and in 1894 amounting to $1,172,191, though still under the term "Cocoanuts," assumes a measure of the importance that copra was destined to gain in the American period. This presumably mixed trade of copra and cocoanuts in earlier years represented only a limited demand of the confectioner and soap-boiler; it was not until improved processes of manufacture had raised the copra derivatives to the importance of food products, and the manufacturers of Marseilles had become enormous consumers of the tropical product that the copra industry assumed its present prominence.

In American times becomes of commercial and export importance.

With allowance for the inclusive character of the Spanish figures the modern export importance of Philippine copra does not seem to date back of 1892, and it is in the American period that this importance is confirmed. Exports during 1900-1904 while showing considerable irregularity, present an annual average in excess of two and a half million dollars. Amounting to $3,182,481 in 1900 they decline to half that figure in the next year, due it is said, to insurrectionary disorders in the copra producing districts at that period. Maximum exports are reached in 1903 with values of $3,819,793, to decline again in 1904 to nearly half as a result of exceptionally unfavorable climatic conditions.

In the distribution of these exports by countries, France takes the foremost place from about the time that the cocoanut returns of the Spanish period seem to indicate the beginning of the copra trade of recent years. French credits are absent in 1892, when British East Indies takes the bulk of the exports which were perhaps largely made up of cocoanuts, but from 1893 to 1904 France is the copra market of the Philippines, taking about half the total in 1893 and 1894 and more than two-thirds of the increased shipments of the American period. Spain has been generally in the second rank showing an average of only about $300,000 during 1900-1904. The United Kingdom has been a purchaser throughout the American period as well as earlier, and Germany has taken some in the past few years, but both the amounts are comparatively small. The United States shows a small trade in 1902-1904, but her share of the total, as well as that of other countries, appears insignificant beside France's annual average of two million, and the copra trade of the Philippines may be considered as virtually French from the rise of copra to recent commercial importance.

five years to a small degree, and just prior to the development of the copra trade it reaches fair proportions, averaging about twenty-five thousand dollars annually during 1885-1894, but dwindling in the American period to only a few hundred dollars possibly due to the superior quality of the French product making the sale of the raw material more profitable than facing such competition with the cruder oil of Philippine manufacture.

The future of the Philippine copra industry seems bright. Although it cannot lay claim to a monopoly as exclusive as that of hemp, yet in the demand created by the increasing use of its derivatives a permanent market seems to be assured in which the Philippines with their natural advantages are calculated to play a conspicuous part among the other tropical producers. A cocoanut plantation is of slow maturity as the trees do not reach fruitfulness for seven years after planting, but once in a bearing condition their limit of productiveness does not seem to be definitely known, so that with the assured export market established in recent years supplementing a considerable domestic demand for both tuba and cocoanut oil, the profitable extension of cocoanut plantations into the vast areas of the islands as yet uncultivated would seem to be a reasonable expectation of the near future; while the exceedingly primitive character of the industry, the slight degree of cultivation and attention involved, and the simple methods required in the preparation of the product for market combine to make it an industry especially suited to Philippine conditions.

(a) Hongkong included under British East Indies from 1885-1887, and from 1888-1894 under China.

NOTE.—Figures prior to 1900 are taken from "Estadística general del comercio exterior de las Islas Filipinas," issued by the Spanish Government, and all quantity reductions necessary in preparing the different tables herewith have been on the basis of kilogram-2.2046 pounds, picul-137.9 pounds, quintal-101.44 pounds.

Interest in coffee exports chiefly historical. The coffee exports of the Philippines have long since ceased to be of any importance and a review of the industry has an interest chiefly historical. From this point of view, however, these exports assume considerable importance, and in the banner years of production 1883 and 1884, with export quantities exceeding 16,000,000 pounds and values exceeding a million dollars, they represent an industry of no little significance in the agricultural assets of the islands.

Within the half-century of figures Development and disappearance of export trade embraced the complete history of the industry, the record of its development, maturity and destruction. 1,246,479 pounds are given as the coffee exports of 1855 and with steady increases thereafter, the industry seems to have reached its maximum period of productiveness during the eighties. It is stated that coffee production in the islands received a serious setback in 1889 due to ravages of an insect pest in the plantations, which was succeeded by a leaf blight that completed the unfinished work of the earlier calamity. The figures show that with exports amounting to 13,709,647 pounds in 1889 they had precipitately declined to 642,595 pounds four years later; while in the American period, with maximum exports of 68,228 pounds in 1901 and but 22,492 pounds in the present year, further emphasis is given to the extent of the adverse conditions that affected production in the early nineties, and the Philippine coffee industry is stamped as a thing of the past.

Prices. Philippine coffee, though stated by some to rival in quality that of Java, does not seem to have received such recognition in the markets of the world. Prices during the years of the highest production were only about seven cents a pound, but in the diminishing production of the latter eighties and 1890 they had a great increase, and export values in spite of reduced quantities exceed a million and a half dollars, and represent an importance and degree of prosperity for the industry much in contrast with the $3,153 worth of coffee exported in the present year.

Countries sharing in the export trade. The chief consumers of Philippine coffee have been Spain, the United Kingdom and the United States, together with a confused but important China-Hongkong trade. Spain has figured throughout, but most conspicuously in the period of greatest and declining production, when her share of the total exports ranges from one-third to two-thirds. The China-Hongkong trade has been of about equal importance to that of Spain, though in the reduced figures of the early nineties it amounts to but about half the Spanish. The United Kingdom was the most conspicuous taker of these exports during the greater part of the seventies, but in the increased quantities of the eighties played a minor part. The United States purchases of Philippine coffee were heaviest in earlier times reaching 1,359,707 pounds in 1866. After 1880 in but the single year 1883 do they amount to as much as 100,000 pounds, and are of little relative importance. In the insignificant coffee exports of the American period, the United States takes about a third in the present year but China has been the largest constant purchaser of the quinquennial period.

The figures under review indicate the prosperous past of the Philippine coffee industry, and show its virtual disappearance as an export factor. To what extent it still contributes to the domestic market there is no means of knowing, and it may only be inferred from the fact that contemporary with the nominal exports of recent years there have been imports for domestic consumption of relatively large quantities, amounting to 998,198 pounds in 1902 and 396,857 pounds in the present year. This point, however, is aside from the purpose of the present review, except in as far as it indicates the existing basis for the restoration of the industry to future export importance; and in view of the figures given, combined with facts bearing upon them, it would appear that the outlook for such a restoration is not promising.

Much has been recently said of the revival of the industry and the aid of an American import duty on coffee in connection with free trade for the Philippine product as a means to this end. The disposition in certain circles is to treat this once profitable industry as an asset in the plans under consideration for bringing prosperity to the islands. It may be so regarded in a way, for the rich returns of the coffee plantations and the suitability of soil and climate to production are matters of record; but it is to be borne in mind that coffee plantations with their rich returns are of slow growth, requiring outlays of capital and from six to twelve years of patient attention and waiting for the first realization of these returns. Extensive investments of this character do not seem probable with the memory of the calamity of fifteen years ago still fresh, and especially in view of the fact that scientific research seems to have failed thus far to find a means of successfully combating the scourges that have destroyed the industry. Not until such a means is found to prevent the repetition of that disaster, and even then not for some years does it seem probable that there will be any large return of confidence and capital to the planting of coffee on such a scale as to make it again an important factor in the agricultural wealth of the islands. The future of the Philippine coffee industry seems for the present to be in the hands of the scientist and agricultural expert.

Large imports in 1904 versus nominal exports.

Outlook for the revival of the industry.

Imports.

Leading items.

Though Philippine imports comprise a great variety of commodities the items of chief value may be summed up under the general heads of clothing, foodstuffs, and manufactures of iron and steel. In the American period under consideration (1900-1904), these three classes represent about two-thirds of the thirty million dollars average of total imports, and in the sixteen million dollar trade of the earlier Spanish period from 1885 to 1894 the proportion is even greater.

Fibers and Textiles.

Fibers and textiles in the Spanish decade represent the heaviest purchases of the islands in foreign markets, and cotton and cotton goods are by far the leading features of this branch of the islands' trade, amounting to nearly six million dollars during 1885-1894 and to somewhat more in the American period.

Foodstuffs.

Foodstuffs, on the other hand, during 1900-1904, have been the leading import feature. Large foreign purchases of rice, owing to agricultural depression, have been the chief cause of the preponderance of food over clothing imports in recent years. Rice was also the leading item in food imports during the Spanish decade, but to no such extent as at present and the total receipts of that time were only about a fourth of the recent average. The foreign purchases of fish as well as of cereals show large increases, while meats and dairy products, though somewhat confused in classification, indicate a growth in trade; but it is to the item of rice above all others, with its average of nearly eight million dollars as opposed to a million and a half in the earlier time, that is due the large food bill of the islands in recent years, averaging a third of the total imports. The consumption of foreign beverages is of minor importance averaging not much in excess of a million dollars yearly, with a slight increase in the average of the American period, due to an abnormal trade in the first years, but in the past two years falling below the prevailing figures of the Spanish period.

Iron, Steel and other imports.

Of next importance to the imports above considered are those of iron and steel and their manufactures, which, averaging about eight hundred thousand dollars in the earlier decade, have generally been in excess of two million in the past five years. Chemicals, drugs, and dyes in the American period show large figures made up chiefly of the single item of opium. Imports of live stock, too, in recent years to offset the disastrous effects of the cattle plague in the islands, swell the general group of animals and animal products to over a million dollars from relatively small figures in the earlier period. Other imports are of only minor importance beside the foregoing, and will be discussed under their separate heads in the detailed analysis of the import trade according to the sixteen general groups to be taken up in succeeding pages.

1889 is the year of largest imports during the Spanish decade, with the excess arising from abnormal purchases of iron and steel combined with rice imports the largest in value in the history of the islands up to that time. 1891 also has an interest arising from the effect of the new tariff of that year in the building up of a Spanish trade that, though previously of small proportions, in the closing years of the decade under review took the leading place. The tariff of 1901 seems to have increased certain imports to a degree in that year due to the stocking up of wares in anticipation of increased duties, while the import figures of 1904 are to some extent affected by the Act of the Philippine Commission of September 9, 1903, by which all insular government supplies purchased abroad are required to pay duty and appear in the regular trade returns. As such supplies are largely bought in the United States the increased American credits for 1904 are in some measure due to this legislation.

The participation of the United States in the import trade of the islands during the Spanish decade was so slight, with the exception of the items of mineral oils and wheat flour, as to make her export trade to the Philippines—aside from these commodities—practically date from the period of American occupation. With American flour still virtually supplying the insular market, and the United States and Russia still dividing the proceeds of a considerable insular oil bill between them, the greatest triumph in American trade extension since the advent of the national flag is to be found in imports of iron and steel and their manufactures, which in the record imports of these wares in 1904 are nearly half of American origin, and constitute a fifth of the five million dollar trade of the United States for the year. American canned goods have also found a market and imports of fruits, vegetables, condensed milk, beef and salmon in this form aggregating a value of nearly four hundred thousand dollars is nearly half from the United States. In bottled beer imports the proportion runs considerably higher, and the supply of raw cotton seems to be about as much of an American monopoly as that of flour, while in lumber, furniture and other wood manufactures the United States takes a prominent place. This is true as well of brass and copper manufactures, plated wares, scientific and electrical instruments, and leather and its manufactures. School books are quite naturally a conspicuously American trade of considerable proportions in view of the energetic extension of education and the American teacher's prominence in the work. This list might be considerably increased to the same purpose, but enough has been said in view of the American place in the import trade of the islands in Spanish times to demonstrate substantially that American trade has followed the flag into these new Oriental dominions.

It is true that there are yet large fields in the islands' trade in which the United States has thus far figured only slightly or not at all; but without entering upon the consideration of these neglected opportunities of the American exporter and the causes for such neglect in a sphere so peculiarly American, the growth of United States trade in the islands as above indicated is gratifying—especially in view of the conditions under which it has taken place. Imports of Spanish origin in 1894, though of but slightly greater value than those of the United States in 1904, were the result of trade relations extending over a long period, and aided by the further stimulus of virtual free trade with Spain. On the other hand American enterprise has, within a relatively brief period borne considerable fruit in a new field where it has enjoyed no tariff favors and has had to win its way in the face of the established trade of older countries. With such a past record the American exporter will doubtless continue to make gains in the course of the four years which must pass before the lapse of the restrictions imposed under the Treaty of Paris, and present achievements give promise of the importance that this oriental market will assume to American trade from 1909, when commercial relations can be made the subject of special adjustment mutually advantageous to the two countries.

(a) Hongkong included under British East Indies from 1885-1887, and from 1888-1894 under China.

The annual imports of animals and animal products during the ten years 1885-1894, show a gradual and uniform increase from $106,603 in the first year, to $222,523 at the end of this last decade of Spanish occupation for which official figures are available. Two exceptions to this uniformity are the years 1891 and 1893, the large increase in the former year being due to a phenomenal import of live stock from Spain, while the abnormal figures of 1893 are to be credited to record-breaking imports of harness and boots and shoes.

No such gradual increase in this group of imports characterizes the American period, which opening with a total of $409,797 in 1900, in 1904 reached the enormous sum of $1,360,170,—figures that are very largely due to heavy importations of cattle to offset the islands' losses through rinderpest. Under the Spanish period live stock imports were but five per cent of the total imports of animals and animal products, except for the one year mentioned, whereas they increase to about sixty-five per cent in 1904 and produce corresponding changes in the countries figuring most prominently in the group totals.

In the 1885-1894 period when the group totals were made up chiefly of unmanufactured leather and boots and shoes, the trade was held largely by the United Kingdom, Spain, Germany, British East Indies and China. From 1886 to 1891 the United Kingdom was considerably in the lead in the total group trade, but with the passage of the tariff of 1891 Spain took the lead and retained it up to 1903 in spite of her relatively small contribution to the heavy live stock imports of the later period, so fully had she established her supremacy in other branches as a result of her tariff advantages of the earlier time. But though British trade thus lost the lead in these imports and has never since regained any such prominence, it presents a notably constant figure throughout the whole fifteen years down to the present time.

German trade in this group has been subject to much more fluctuation. From the first rank in 1885 with a trade of $26,560 it fell off seriously in 1888, reacted in 1889 and almost disappeared in the succeeding year, with a total of but $1,173. During the American period this country's trade has increased in the aggregate and shows more uniformity.

During 1885, 1886 and 1887, British East Indies figures largely in this group total but later on during the Spanish period her shipments dwindle to almost nothing. As China takes an important position in 1888, coincident with this decline, the figures seem to bear out the view above stated, that Hongkong trade in its classification was shifted to China in this year and forms a part of China's large trade until the end of the Spanish period. Chinese trade from 1888 shows up as an important and fairly constant factor and if taken in conjunction with Hongkong in the American period, develops into enormous proportions as we approach the present time.

Taking up the group in detail we find boots and shoes the leading item during 1885-1894 ranging roughly from $50,000 to $100,000 from the beginning to the end of the period. Under the American period this trade loses its relative importance, but shows a rapid actual increase from $160,309 in 1900, to $464,354 in 1903, a trebling of shoe imports in four years, which may be taken as showing the rapid spread of American civilization in the islands.

In the boot and shoe trade the United Kingdom until 1891 played the leading part but in that year Spain gained to such an extent as to dwarf the boot and shoe imports of other individual countries contributing over half of this trade in 1892, 1893 and 1894, and in the American period showing even a greater supremacy, except in 1900, when with Germany as a close second they together furnished seventy-five per cent of the total. In 1902 and 1903 Spain alone is credited with about three-fourths of this greatly increased trade though in the latter year the United States shows definite gains at her expense.

The Spanish tariff of 1891 gave the growing British shoe trade in the islands a blow from which it has shown little sign of recovering. It declined continuously until the end of the Spanish period and has shown only irregular signs of activity since American occupation.

The position of the United States in the Philippine boot and shoe trade dates from American occupation, the total imports credited to her during the whole of the Spanish decade amounting to only about $200. Since 1900 her share of this trade has grown rapidly, being in that year but $7,832 and in 1904 $100,144, or 35 per cent of the total, the latter figures placing her in the second rank in the trade and causing a considerable falling off of the Spanish figures from those of the previous year.

German boot and shoe trade, though leading in 1885 with imports amounting to $19,655, has been subject to considerable fluctuation and almost disappeared in 1890 and 1891. With these exceptions Germany has been in evidence from year to year, though except in 1900 when her trade amounted to $50,241, her part has been a minor one and in a shoe trade that has materially increased in the past two decades, her position at the end has improved little when compared with what it was at the beginning.

The imports of unmanufactured leather in the Spanish period averaged in value about half those of boots and shoes and show a fairly regular increase. In the American period, however, the proportion is reduced to about a sixth, and the imports of raw material are not greatly in excess of those of the earlier time.

In imports of unmanufactured leather the United Kingdom, Spain and Germany were leading contributors in the earlier period, while the United States is added to this list in recent times. At first the United Kingdom enjoyed a prosperous and leading position culminating in the tariff of 1891, but afterward her shipments show a decline from which they are only now beginning to react. Spain, in 1892, 1893 and 1894 held more than half this trade. In 1900 she still held about one-third and though in the succeeding year she was distanced by the United States, continued to share in the increasing volume of leather imports.

Unmanufactured leather is the chief item in the group of animals and animal products that is credited to the United States in the Spanish period. In 1885 she ranked fourth with a trade of $1,580, and from time to time thereafter is credited with like small amounts. With these small beginnings, in 1900 her trade amounted to $5,075, in the succeeding year she led Spain and all others in these imports and has furnished from that time on over a third of the total trade.

German shipments of unmanufactured leather have been very irregular. They led those of all other countries in 1885, but dropped to a value of only $118 in 1890 to increase in the next year to $31,460, and have fluctuated from $3,000 to $7,000 since American occupation, but as a whole they have declined rather than increased since 1885.

Live stock imports for the Spanish period, with the exception of 1891 previously alluded to, range from $3,000 to $15,000. This trade was largely made up of sheep, credited for the most part to British East Indies and China. Smaller sums represent shipments of horses credited to British East Indies, while hogs appear in the imports toward the end of the period, chiefly credited to China.

The total imports of live stock, amounting to $15,891 in 1894, increased to $117,764 in 1900, and in 1904 to $880,616; but in this enormous increase the sources of supply remained practically the same, i. e., the near-by countries. These imports were composed, to by far the greatest extent, of cattle, and in 1900 and 1901 more than two-thirds the total were credited to British East Indies, with Hongkong far behind in the second rank. China does not seem to have realized the possibilities of this trade until 1901, but in 1903 had availed herself so fully of them as to contribute $698,602, or more than three-fourths of the live stock total of that year, and practically drove British East Indies out of the market. The rise of Hongkong into prominence in this trade succeeded that of British East Indies, and has since yielded precedence to China, but there is lack of evidence as to the source of the large trans-shipments made from that port.

Of other live stock imports of the American period, horses rank next in importance, the bulk of this trade being credited to Australasia, while China is still conspicuous in the hog trade of the islands.

The disturbing factor in a general survey of the import trade in animals and animal products is to be found in the heavy demand in recent years for cattle to restock the farms of the plague-swept islands. Eliminating this abnormal element it is found that throughout the Spanish period for which figures have been obtained, there is a fairly uniform growth of trade and such figures as might be anticipated at the beginning of the American period, after an unrecorded interval of five years from 1895 to 1900.

(a) Hongkong included under British East Indies from 1885-1887, and from 1888-1894 under China.

Owing to the volume and importance of the rice imports of the islands they have been accorded a separate analysis. Under the head of cereals and cereal products the importations of wheat flour since 1885 have been such as to resolve any discussion of the group totals into a review of the import fluctuations of this commodity,—the only other item of mentionable importance that occurs continuously in this group being macaroni and vermicelli; the latter, however, averages only about ten per cent of the flour imports throughout.

With rice as the universal food of the people, flour and the other foodstuffs under this group may be considered as more essentially the food of the foreign element, and this together with the fact that the use of these commodities is not affected through insular production, would lead to the expectation of a marked degree of uniformity in the volume of these imports. The figures bear this out from 1885 to the present. Wheat flour imports during the Spanish period show a fairly constant figure, averaging about a half million dollars yearly with a perceptible though slight increase toward the end of the period. 1890 was an exception and was the banner year with imports of $670,268, but inasmuch as the imports of the previous and succeeding years were abnormally small, the figures may be explained as a mere case of depletion and over-stocking.

In the American period, with a total wheat flour importation of $475,236 in 1900 the trade has shown a considerably more rapid growth, having almost doubled in the quinquennial period and now amounts to more than sixty per cent in excess of the average during the Spanish period.

Importations of macaroni and vermicelli follow almost the identical lines of increase shown by wheat flour, with a general average from 1885 of more than $40,000 to double that average in the American period.

In the analysis of wheat flour imports by countries much uncertainty is involved in the earlier period, this trade being almost exclusively credited to British East Indies in 1885-6-7, but with 1888 by almost exactly the figures of the previous year, it is transferred to China and the supremacy of China is maintained throughout the rest of the Spanish period. Taking the known source of wheat flour imports in the American period together with this transposition of figures and other information, it seems likely that the United States has had a practical monopoly of this trade throughout, and that these large credits variously made to British East Indies and to China really represent but trans-shipments of American flour at Hongkong.

The first important direct shipments credited to the United States were in 1888 and amounted to $83,952, but in the two succeeding years she is credited with nothing and China supplies all but a few hundred dollars of the total purchases of flour. In 1893 and 1894 the United States is again credited with direct shipments aggregating about half those credited to China, and in the year 1899, when under the American occupation Hongkong shipments were still included in China's trade, China still far distances the United States in the statistical record of flour imports; but in 1900 Hongkong trade is separately reported and at once takes the lead in flour shipments valued at $313,262, with the United States a good second and Chinese figures shrunk to $20,933, while in the next year when effort was made to get the true source of Hongkong imports, the United States leads with $532,714, while China trade is only $2,356, and Hongkong credits drop to but a few hundreds, and this lead by the United States is maintained down to the present with shipments valued at $718,735 in 1904. With ninety-five per cent of the flour trade now to her credit she has practically no competitor. The macaroni and vermicelli imports are subject, in the Spanish period, to the same confusion concerning the country of origin as is flour, the great bulk being credited in the earlier years to British East Indies and later to China. But this is not so clearly Hongkong trade as in the former case, since though in 1900, the first year that Hongkong trade is separately reported the British port takes the lead, in the next year China is credited with practically all the macaroni and vermicelli imports and still retains nearly three-fourths of this trade in 1904.

Among those countries sharing in a minor measure Spain is to be mentioned. Throughout the Spanish period she is in the second rank each year with a fairly uniform sum. With the American occupation, however, Spain lost much of her trade along this line and though she has made gains from year to year since, her shipments to the value of $5,555 in 1904 are only about half what they were in the earlier time.

Of other imports in this group mentioned in detail besides wheat flour and macaroni and vermicelli in the earlier period, the values are small. In the American period, however, these considerably swell the group totals for each year, and the item of malt, of which there is no separate mention in Spanish times, makes Germany the third ranking country in the total group trade throughout the American quinquennial period. Germany supplies practically the whole of these imports which in 1904 were valued at $48,842.

In a general survey of the figures the principal features are the uniformity and very gradual increase of the trade during the recorded Spanish period, the rapid increase in the past five years, and the absence of any marked increase during the unrecorded period 1895-1899.

NOTE.—Hongkong included under British East Indies from 1885-1887; from 1888-1894 under China, and from 1900-1904 under other countries.

Rice, the staple foodstuff of the Philippines, has been an article of increasing import for half a century reaching the million dollar mark in 1877, and falling below this in but few recorded years since.

Being largely produced in the islands, even to the extent of exporting considerable quantities in earlier years, the import figures in consequence show wide fluctuations and from year to year serve only to register the deficit due to short crops and local conditions in rice culture.

In the Spanish period under consideration the high-water mark for rice importations was reached in 1889*, with a value of $3,862,820, the highest figure up to that time attained within the history of the islands. This represents an irregular but extraordinary increase from 1885, when imports were only a third of this amount. From 1889 there is an interrupted but marked decline to 1893, when rice imports amounted to but $628,331 the lowest figure subsequent to 1882.

In the American period the heavy increase in rice imports has had a marked effect on the balance of trade in the islands, and has been the subject of much concern in its bearing on general economic conditions. In 1900 these imports were $4,365,056 or about half a million dollars in excess of the highest figures of the Spanish period above referred to, but this large sum increased steadily until 1903, when with rice imports amounting to the enormous sum of $12,552,382* this single item represented over a third of the total imports of the islands.

The reasons for this very abnormal condition in the American period are not difficult to determine, and must be chiefly credited to the ravages of rinderpest, stripping the farms of carabao, the universal draft animal of the islands, whose amphibious nature seems to make him indispensable to the method of rice culture employed. Subordinate reasons are doubtless to be found in the insurrectionary disorders which tended to discourage the cultivation of crops that required months of waiting for results under unsettled conditions, and turned the attention of the laborer to the hemp and copra industries in which immediate returns rewarded his efforts. It is to be noted in this connection that large increases in the exports of hemp and copra are coincident with these growing shipments of rice from abroad.

These reasons seem to be borne out by the rice imports for 1904, which from the twelve millions of the preceding year drop to $7,710,754. The effect of peaceful conditions and the efforts of the insular government to stamp out rinderpest, restock the farms and encourage rice cultivation, appear at last to begin to bear fruit and further declines in rice imports may be anticipated.

* The quantity of rice imported was somewhat larger in 1884 but owing to low price, the value of imports was considerably less than in 1889. Comparisons throughout are made from a value standpoint.

The countries participating in these imports since 1885 have been the near-by oriental rice-producing territory, British and French East Indies, China, and Siam practically monopolizing the trade, and with but slight changes in their relative positions from year to year.

In 1885-6-7 British East Indies lead, but with 1888 French East Indies from second place take the first and from that year, with the exception of 1900, have occupied the first rank in the imports of rice into the islands, and has generally furnished considerably in excess of half the total. China in 1888 is credited with the second place apparently due to the shifting of the Hongkong trade, as British East Indies shows a great decline in this year, and is credited with only small sums during the rest of the Spanish period. China retains second rank from 1888 and on through the American period down to 1904, with the exception of 1900, in which year she leads with more than half the total. In 1900 the order of the trade was much disturbed, with Hongkong in the second rank and credited with nearly a million dollars, and French East Indies sharing a minor part; but in the next year the old order is resumed and Hongkong trans-shipments almost disappear.

Siam has figured in the rice imports and in the earlier years of the Spanish period is credited with considerable shipments, which, however, disappear in the declining trade of the later years. Her share in the large increases of the American period has been fairly constant with a total of $455,609 in 1904. The British East Indies rice trade in American times has been somewhat more irregular, but in the last year is about double that of Siam.

The figures for 1904—apart from the decline they show—are interesting from the fact that though in the preceding year China had a trade of over a million and a half dollars, in this year she is not credited with the shipment of a single dollar's worth of rice to the islands. This surprising disappearance of a large trade in one year and the absence of China in a trade in which she has been conspicuous throughout the years under consideration, is probably, however, to be attributed to the Russo-Japanese war and the presence of a nearer and more lucrative market created at the seat of operations. This trade abandoned by China has been taken over by French East Indies thereby strengthening her place in the rice import trade of the islands, of which she furnishes over eighty per cent in 1904.

In a general review of the rice import figures of the islands one is struck by the analogy between the high-water mark of 1889 and subsequent decline of the Spanish period, and the increase in American times culminating in 1903 and showing signs of abatement since. A review of earlier figures show similar import waves in 1884, 1879 and 1858, which last date is about coincident with the islands' permanent failure to produce their food supply and governmental recognition of the condition by placing rice on the free list. The significance of this series of ebbs in production and swells in imports of the staple food of the people, seems to lie in that this recurring increase is out of proportion to the increase in population and general industrial growth of the islands, and the inference is that the local rice industry has been through a long period on a decline.

This failure to produce its food supply by a country well qualified to do so is to be deprecated and the fostering of the industry by the government is worth considering. But back of the condition seems the economic fact that labor in the islands is being increasingly better paid elsewhere than in the rice fields, and that the islanders find it more economical to purchase their food in the cheap oriental markets than to grow it. Nor does this condition seem likely to abate under American rule, with wages reported to be already more than doubled. If the American standard of wages is to be approximated to in the islands it would seem that American methods of rice culture must also prevail if the industry is to be saved from extinction. The enormous labor-cost of producing rice in the primitive method of the Orient,—which is the present method in the Philippines,—makes its production industrially impossible except under such wage conditions as are characteristic of the East.

(a) Hongkong included under British East Indies from 1885-1887, and from 1888-1894 under China.

An entirely satisfactory review of the group of meat and meat products for the period under consideration is impossible from the fact that in the Spanish times such imports were not separately reported.

From 1885 to the inauguration of the tariff of 1891 the components of this group were assembled under two general schedules: Preserved foods (a) in cans and jars, and (b) pickled, salted, and dried. Meats were no doubt the leading element of value, but other miscellaneous foodstuffs seem also to have been included to an extent to seriously impair some of the figures for comparative purposes in the analysis of meat imports. The schedules though fluctuating considerably average about $350,000 yearly.

The annual value of the foodstuffs, in the second class, in which meat is probably the chief item, runs somewhat in excess of $100,000, the bulk of which seems to have been Hongkong trade and is later credited to China. Spanish and British trade show some prominence and the United States figures in the years 1885 and 1887 with small shipments.

Under the tariff of 1891 the classification improves for comparative purposes. With beef and pork separately reported the meat trade of the islands can from this time be followed with more certainty.

In this latter end of the recorded Spanish period the beef trade averages in value only about five per cent of the pork imports. In the American period, however, this ratio undergoes a marked increase due, doubtless, to the loss of the local supply through the cattle plague as well as to the improved facilities offered by cold storage for the importation of fresh meat. During the Spanish times there were no fresh meat imports recorded, but cold storage transportation has made great advances since then, and during the American period fresh meat shipments completely dominate the beef trade.

Imports of pork, bacon, and lard, after much fluctuation, close the Spanish period with a value of $127,965,—without any very perceptible increase. The American period begins with $163,489 worth, and with yearly increases since reaches the sum of $420,646 in 1904.

The source of the beef supply has shifted since the latter years of the Spanish recorded period, when in the relatively small cured beef imports, the United States furnished the greater part. With fresh beef as the leading item since 1900 Australasia has to a large measure claimed the beef trade for her own. With a steady doubling of her shipments in the three first years they reach the extraordinary sum of $336,128 in 1904. The United States occupies second place in the beef trade of the American period with imports valued at from $10,000 to $15,000, made up almost exclusively of canned beef of which she has a practical monopoly.

The pork trade has perhaps been controlled by China throughout. In the mixed figures of 1887 and 1888 British East Indies was prominent in the former year, but gave place to China in the next, indicating that it was Hongkong trade, but inasmuch as in the American period China still retains her supremacy, the imports doubtless came from the Chinese mainland through the British port.

During 1891-1894 China's pork trade more than doubled that of her next competitor,—a position that the United Kingdom and Spain competed for, while the United States held third rank. This lead has been maintained throughout the American period with the exception of the year 1900 when Hongkong appears, with what was doubtless Chinese pork. In this trade that has increased about three-fold in American times and is now approaching a half-million, China has distanced her old competitors more and more. Spain has dropped far behind, the United Kingdom holds scarcely what it did in Spanish times, and though the United States has forged ahead into second place with imports valued at $50,823 in 1904, China does nearly six times as much of the pork trade of the islands.

Among minor imports of the group of meats and meat products, poultry and game is the only item that can be followed continuously throughout the period considered. China furnished the most of this in Spanish times, which, however, amounted to only a few hundreds yearly, but since American occupation Australasia has been the principal source of supply in a trade that averages $10,000 annually.

The leading unmentioned item of the meat group separately reported in recent years is that of imitation butter, valued at $23,495 in 1904, a trade which the United Kingdom and China share between them.

(a) Hongkong included under British East Indies from 1885-1887, and from 1888-1894 under China.

Fish imports have been subject to wide fluctuations from year to year. With a total trade valued at $107,049 in 1885 it drops to less than one-third in the next year, in 1889 increases to the sum of $355,808, and toward the end of the recorded Spanish period falls to about the fifty thousand dollar mark.

In the American period the group totals are much larger but hardly less erratic, showing a rapid rise from $120,380 in 1900 to more than half a million in 1902, but in the succeeding two years have declined to less than half that amount, which was the maximum in the history of the islands' fish trade.

Throughout the Spanish period China seems—with shipments via Hongkong—to have furnished the great bulk of fish imports. Though her supremacy has not been so marked in American times, having to share credit with Spain, she is still a ruling factor in the total imports under this classification a slight advantage being shown in the latest yearly returns.

Prior to 1891 all fish imports were grouped under a general schedule but dating from the tariff of that year, a more detailed classification was used, from which it appears that China's lead was made up largely of shell fish—a class of imports in which she is still pre-eminent.

Spain who throughout American times has shared with China the larger part of the fish trade, has done so by virtue of heavy shipments of the product, no doubt extending back into the Spanish period, and would have given more prominence to her fish shipments of those years but that this item was not then separately reported.

Though in 1889 the banner year of Spanish occupation in the fish trade, the United States is credited with $16,823 of the total, shipments appear only at irregular intervals thereafter and this branch of the United States trade may be said to date from the American period, when with shipments of $5,452 in 1900, she shared conspicuously in the unprecedented figures of 1902 and has since done about a forty thousand dollar trade yearly, made up of canned goods, chiefly salmon.

The United Kingdom figured throughout the Spanish period with fish shipments of varying but minor importance. In the American era she shared in the increase and subsequent decline, with a total of $18,903 in 1904 of which more than half was canned.

Fish imports have reached large figures in recent years especially in view of the facilities enjoyed by the islands to supply their own needs, but the noticeable volume of trade may be attributed to the fact that canned fish does not appear in the totals of the Spanish period, while in recent times the large increases are chiefly made up of the growing demand for this most convenient and modern form of prepared food.

(a) Hongkong included under British East Indies from 1885-1887, and from 1888-1894 under China.

In Spanish times only butter and cheese are included under this group, the total imports of which range from $30,000 to $60,000 during the decade without any perceptible increase. But an increase is to be inferred during the unrecorded period from the larger figures with which the American period opens. This increase, however, is not sustained; since with a total of butter and cheese imports amounting to $134,223 in 1900, there has been an annual decline up to the present year, which though showing a slight reaction presents a total of but $105,863.

It is to be noted that throughout the Spanish period the imports of these commodities remain at about equal value, but in recent years the butter shipments show a marked increase over those of cheese.

The butter trade was well distributed during the Spanish period, with what seems to be Hongkong trade as a disturbing factor in the relatively heavy imports of 1885 and 1886. In succeeding years the United Kingdom is credited with the bulk of this trade, with Germany, Spain and China as close competitors.

This lead, however, is not maintained during the American period. The United Kingdom with shipments to the value of $10,036 in 1900 in a trade dominated in that year by the questionable source of Hongkong, in the following year distances all others with record-breaking shipments of $31,882, but drops thereafter to figures scarcely equaling those of the Spanish period.

Contemporary with the decline of the British butter trade was the rise of Australasia in this field, her shipments for the past three years being over half the total imports, thus reducing the contributions from other countries. This Australasian trade seems to have had its origin in the unrecorded period 1895-1899 as it does not figure in the imports previously, while in 1900 it already amounts to $7,269 and steadily increases up to the present year with a total of $38,196.

Among minor contributors Italy who is credited with irregular shipments of butter to a considerable extent in Spanish times, has for the past two years done a nine thousand dollar trade, and Netherlands with a similar record during the Spanish period is credited with small and irregular shipments in American times; while China, who figured conspicuously in the earlier period, shows a dwindling trade in recent years,—due perhaps to the clearing up of the sources of Hongkong trade.

In the cheese trade of the islands the United Kingdom under the Spanish regime held a position that not even the tariff of 1891 could disturb, contributing practically half these imports. In the increased trade since American occupation, however, she has lost this supremacy and has found close competitors in France and the Netherlands, these three countries holding the bulk of the trade and changing their order of importance from year to year. The British cheese trade shows marked uniformity since 1885 but is scarcely equal in American times to what it was in the central years of the Spanish period.

The group totals of dairy products during 1900-1904 are greatly increased by reason of the added item of condensed milk, not separately reported, prior to that time, but merged into the general schedule of canned goods. In the American period this item is the leading import of the group, and with receipts valued at $231,462, or about five times what they were in 1900, it has since 1902 represented considerably more than double the value of butter and cheese imports combined.

This condensed milk trade has been dominated throughout the American period by the United Kingdom and the United States, with British shipments during 1901-2-3 double the American, but in the present year purchases from the United States exceed those from the United Kingdom by several thousand dollars and represent over a third of the $231,462 worth imported in 1904.

(a) Hongkong included under British East Indies from 1885-1887, and from 1888-1894 under China.

The liquor trade of the islands during the period 1885-1894 averaged a million dollars yearly with the exception of 1888 and 1890, when it dropped to half that amount. The irregularities of these two years are due to heavy declines in wine imports, and the group totals taken for the decade show a striking uniformity without any clearly defined tendency.

The American period under review opens with imports of $1,711,243,—a large increase over earlier figures and made up for the most part of beer. Every year thereafter witnesses a regular decline until in 1904 with a total of $788,451 the liquor trade of the islands falls somewhat below the normal figure of Spanish times.

In the imports of 1885-1894 Spain holds a supremacy throughout due to a virtual monopoly of the wine trade,—that is never seriously questioned by any other country. During 1888, 1889 and 1890, from a serious shrinkage in wine shipments, her share in the liquor trade falls below one-half of the total but during the rest of the period she again controls the trade.

From 1900, however, Spain is forced into the second rank and the United States with a trade that in the whole Spanish decade did not amount to $5,000, advances to over a million dollars in the large total of that year. In the decline that has followed Spain holds the second place while the United States continues to lead, contributing in the present year a little less than half the total liquor imports.

The United Kingdom has been the leading minor factor in this trade with shipments that are fairly regular and close to $100,000 per year. France and Germany, with considerable but fluctuating shipments in Spanish times, show a more regular participation in the trade during the American era. Receipts from British East Indies, though showing wide fluctuations, have also figured somewhat in the totals, while the Chinese credits are no doubt due to Hongkong trade.

In the Spanish period wines were by far the leading value in the imports of the group and if we except the abnormal years, 1888, 1889 and 1890 they represent eighty per cent of the totals, while beer imports are about $100,000 yearly. Since American occupation these proportions are greatly altered, with wines representing but a sixth of the total in 1900, and a third in the present year, while beer, which dominated the liquor trade in the earlier year, still represents a third of the whole.

Imports of distilled liquors on the other hand show considerable uniformity throughout both periods. 1889 was the banner year of this trade with figures reaching more than half a million. In 1901 and 1902 they fall somewhat short of this amount, but these are exceptions, and taken as a whole the trade runs with much regularity throughout the fifteen years, with $251,476, the total of the present year not far from the average.

In a wine trade that for several years in Spanish times approached and even exceeded a million dollars in value, Spain enjoyed practically all, other countries being credited with nominal values, but with American occupation a different showing is developed, and it averages but $300,000 during that period, dropping to $211,576 in the present year.

The beer trade during the Spanish decade was practically in the hands of the United Kingdom and Germany. In the great increase with which the American period opens, the United States not only takes up this increase but encroaches on the trade previously held by the United Kingdom and Germany, the trade of the former country in particular having shrunk in recent years to nominal proportions.

In the distilled spirits trade of the Spanish era the United Kingdom and British East Indies were the leading and most constant factors. Spain with the aid of the tariff of 1891 from a minor place took the lead for two years, but dropped back before the end of the period and has contributed but small shipments in recent years. With 1900 the United States has taken a decided lead in imports of spirits though the United Kingdom, holding the second place, has about maintained the value of her trade established in the earlier period. The prominence of the British East Indies in that time has, however, not been maintained and her considerable trade during the first years of American occupation seems to be declining.

In a general survey of the figures of this group the notable feature is the expansion of the beer trade in the early years of American occupation and the corresponding collapse in wine imports. The large beer imports of 1900, with the subsequent regular decline from year to year, may be attributed to the presence of the American soldier and his steady withdrawal since. A heavy drop in wine imports seemingly coincident with American occupation may not be so certainly the result of the withdrawal of the force of military and civil employees of the Spanish regime.

The decline in imports of American beer is partly to be attributed to the development of local manufacture, the American product being displaced by the output of the insular brewery, made chiefly from German malt, to which reference has previously been made in discussing cereal imports.

(a) Hongkong included under British East Indies from 1885-1887, and from 1888-1894 under China.

The total yearly imports of cotton goods show a striking uniformity throughout the fifteen years. The banner years of Spanish times were 1888 and 1892, but as the trade of the previous year in each case was correspondingly small, the irregularity is perhaps to be attributed to a depletion and filling up of stocks. The American period opens with a considerable increase in the trade, but this has not been sustained, and the total cotton imports for 1904, amounting to $5,579,682, seem to show that the trade is again very close to the five and a half millions that was the average of the Spanish decade.

In the cotton trade of the islands the United Kingdom has been the dominating factor throughout though her control has been subject to marked decline since the earlier years of the Spanish period, when she held over three-fourths of the total. The break in British supremacy dates from the tariff of 1891 which had the effect of materially stimulating the importation of Spanish goods. In 1894 Spain shares about equally with the United Kingdom five-sixths of the whole trade, and during the American occupation the United Kingdom is credited from year to year with just about half the total.

The Spanish cotton trade which under tariff privileges, advanced from a few hundred thousands to over a million in a single year, and increased rapidly to the end of the recorded Spanish period, has not under American administration, maintained her earlier rivalry with the United Kingdom. Though occupying second place with the $891,189 worth of imports in the present year, her trade is but about a third that of the British.

With the United States occupying third place in the cotton trade of this year we have a striking instance of steady gains by the American manufacturer in the insular markets. In the Spanish period the United States credits were merely nominal, in many years amounting to but three figures. With credits of $99,594 in 1900 each year shows substantial gains in her proportion of the trade until in 1904 having distanced all minor competitors, with credits four-fold those of 1900, she shows cotton imports of half the value of those of Spain.

Among minor contributors British East Indies is the most prominent of the earlier period, but her cotton trade, though more regularly in American times, seems to be declining. Germany and China figure to a lesser degree through the fifteen years, while Switzerland, with small shipments in Spanish times, shows a trade of considerably increased volume during 1900-1904.

Under the technical distinction "closely woven," about half of the imports of cotton and cotton manufactures is comprehended throughout the whole fifteen years, though the proportion is slightly heavier in the earlier time. This subdivision of the cotton trade may be considered as peculiarly British. In the earlier years the British East Indies was the United Kingdom's only noteworthy but far-distanced competitor. Spain by 1894 had almost half this trade, but in the American period the British position has been constantly strengthened until in the present year the United Kingdom holds approximately two-thirds of the total. Her nearest competitor in the past two years has been the United States, over half of whose newly developed cotton trade is made up of closely woven textiles.

The British trade in loosely woven cottons has had a different experience. During Spanish times, out for some erratic competition from the British East Indies, she held a lead in this trade until 1894, Spanish trade being only nominal throughout and unstimulated by the tariff of 1891. But in the shrinkage that has taken place in loosely woven stuffs throughout American times, the United Kingdom has lost heavily both in volume and pre-eminence until in the present year she has only a nominal lead in a trade that has been growing yearly more evenly distributed. British East Indies which in the earlier time figured irregularly shows a constant trade in 1900-1904 that is now rivalling the United Kingdom, while both Spain and Switzerland seem to be establishing a permanent though minor place in the imports of this class of cotton textiles.

Second in importance to woven fabrics in the imports of the cotton group is the item of yarn and thread. These imports show the considerable yearly average of $700,000. They chiefly represent raw material for the supply of the local weaving industry in connection with the production of the many varieties of native cloth; the product of the primitive hand loom being still an important factor in the textile supply of the islands, as evidenced by the large imports of yarns, which continue with marked uniformity and with even a slight increase in value from 1885 down to the present time.

This trade in the earlier period was conspicuously held by the United Kingdom, until the last year, when Spanish shipments with a phenomenal increase take the lead. In the American period British yarns maintain their lead of previous years and represent about half the total imports. A notable feature in the yarn trade of the American occupation has been the prominent place taken by Japan who is not credited with a dollar's worth in the Spanish period, but since 1901 has been second only to the United Kingdom and is credited this year with yarn and thread imports valued at $154,172.

Imports of knitted goods though showing a general large increase toward the end of the fifteen years have been subject to wide fluctuations and irregular gains from year to year, reaching a maximum of $749,863 in 1904. In the irregularities of this trade Spain has held the lead without a break since 1885, and is credited with more than seventy-five per cent of this year's total. Though in excess of her average, the ratio given emphasizes what has been a well defined hold on this trade throughout. Germany has almost as uniformly held the second rank in the imports of knitted goods as the United Kingdom has generally ranked third but with values of minor importance.

Another item of cotton manufactures calling for separate mention is that of tulles and laces, made up of irregular annual imports averaging less than $100,000 but showing a tendency to increase since 1885. The United Kingdom has regularly led in such imports down to the present, with Germany generally in the second rank. These fancy goods decreased in this year to a value of but $47,794, the lowest figure in the fifteen years with only two exceptions; but proportions remain about the same, with the United Kingdom far in the lead of Germany, while France following in the lines of recent years becomes a close third.

The comparative value of the figures for the various classes of textiles in Spanish and American times is somewhat affected by the fact that in the earlier decade wearing apparel is not separately reported, but seems to have been included under the class of textile chiefly composing it. Cotton wearing apparel is a separate schedule of considerable importance in the American period, and in 1901 shows the large total of $808,658, which, however, has declined heavily each year since and in 1904 amounts to but $149,851.

In this trade Spain has been pre-eminent and though suffering greatly in the declining total, has more than maintained her lead with above half of the imports of the present year. Germany has held second place throughout her figures occasionally being very close to those of Spain; but the United States from small beginnings has made absolute gains during the general decline, and with imports valued at $16,966 in 1904 is now a rival of Germany for the second place in the trade in cotton wearing apparel.

(a) Hongkong included under British East Indies from 1885-1887, and from 1888-1894 under China.

Though cotton is by far the leading import for the clothing of the Filipinos, figures for the fifteen years show that other vegetable fibers have played a not inconsiderable part, and that these together with silk and wool have represented annual import values of a little less than a million and a half.

This trade in the Spanish period is fairly uniform, the year 1891 being an exception, with a total of $2,446,737,—by far the highest in the fifteen years. These latter figures, however, are chiefly due to abnormal imports of silk probably in anticipation of tariff changes made during that year.

In the American period while the average given above is maintained the trade has been far more irregular, running in 1901 and 1902 above any years of the Spanish period but the one mentioned, falling in 1900 and 1904 below the lowest figures of that decade, and indicating in the past two years a level below the average of earlier times.

The most conspicuous import under this group is silk, which if we discount the markedly abnormal years 1891, 1901 and 1902, shows an annual total of something less than half a million with a perceptible increase in American times. In 1891 silk imports reach a maximum value of $1,351,617 while in 1901 and 1902 they average eight hundred thousand, but in the present year fall below the half million mark.

The silk trade of the islands shows absolutely no uniformity of source during Spanish times, alternating between the United Kingdom, British East Indies, France, Spain and China, by turns in the lead, which countries in preceding and succeeding years figure only in minor places. It was large shipments of silk from the United Kingdom amounting to $549,826 and unprecedented in the history of the trade, that developed such a heavy showing in the group totals of 1891, but in 1890 and in 1892 the United Kingdom occupied a rather insignificant place, while the tariff privileges of Spain though increasing her trade gave her the lead only in 1892.

In the closing years of the decade, however, China and France show a constant prominence, and this has persisted throughout the American period if we except the Hongkong complications of 1900, China being in the lead and France a more or less close second with over half the silk trade shared between them. Switzerland in the American period has taken a place of minor prominence and in the large trade of 1901 and 1902 was conspicuously in the third place with imports of over $100,000, but in succeeding years Germany with generally small credits in the earlier decade has made gains until in the present year, with silk imports valued at $67,666 she is now a close rival with France for the second place.

Of second importance in this group and of but very little difference in value to the imports of silk in the Spanish period, are those of hemp, flax, jute, and kindred vegetable fibers and their manufactures, though in recent years this trade shows some decline.

In the years immediately succeeding 1885 the United Kingdom had a large preponderance in this miscellaneous fiber and textile trade, with the rest of it chiefly shared by China and the British East Indies. Spain first comes into prominence in 1891 and toward the end of the decade is the ruling factor with half the total, while China holds second place.

In the somewhat reduced figures of American times Spain has not maintained this lead. China has dominated the market throughout and together with the United Kingdom in recent years, they hold more than half the total, while British East Indies with considerable credits in 1900 and 1901 seems to be losing again her hold on this trade.

Owing to climatic conditions the woolen trade of the islands is naturally of minor importance. During the Spanish decade it was valued at about $200,000 annually—subject to some irregularities, while in 1900-1904 the trade is slightly in excess of this average.

In imports of wools and woollens the United Kingdom and Germany have been the most uniformly conspicuous countries throughout the fifteen years, and have shared honors almost equally. In the earlier years of the decade the odds were slightly in favor of the United Kingdom and with 1891 Spain from an insignificant place became an active rival until the end of the period. From 1900 on the odds have been in favor of Germany. Spanish trade has declined and now amounts to but $8,927. The United Kingdom in 1900 and 1901 lost the second place to France, but since then French shipments have declined from year to year while British have advanced until, in the present year, Germany leads the United Kingdom by less than a thousand dollars, and together they share nearly half of the $245,018 total, while France is credited with but $29,812.

The United States appears in the woolen trade of the Spanish period in but few years and then for only trifling sums. In 1900 her credits are but $1,124, but by a doubling process since, they amount to $19,962 in the present year with indications of continued development in the future.

Hats and caps are a last chief subdivision of this group. These imports have been subject to wide fluctuations from year to year, and show a marked decline in value under the American period from the $300,000 average of the Spanish. This trade was mostly German and British during 1885-1894. Up to 1888 these countries shared equally in what was a virtual monopoly, but in that year China received large credits that reappeared in several succeeding years, without being clearly of Hongkong origin, or yet of Chinese, as judged by the figures of American times.

The lead of Germany is the principal feature of the American period, in which that country's hat trade represents from a third to a half of the total, with Spain second, the British trade of former years being almost entirely lost. The market for the American hat dates from American occupation, as evidenced by the imports of the present year amounting to $11,183 out of the total of $104,838, or 10 per cent of trade compared with but 2 per cent in 1901.

(a) Hongkong included under British East Indies from 1885-1887, and from 1888-1894 under China.

The imports of jewelry and wares of gold and silver are characterized by much irregularity. In the earlier years of the Spanish period they average somewhat more than $100,000 annually, but in 1893 and 1894 there is a drop in the trade to one-third of this sum.

During American occupation trade has fluctuated even more. With purchases to the amount of $211,153 in 1900, they reach the large sum of $695,870 in the succeeding year, and irregularly decline afterward until in 1904 they amount to but $143,408. This trade was widely distributed during the opening years of the Spanish period, with Germany generally holding the leading position, but in succeeding years she loses, and although recovering in a measure since 1900, the value of her trade is still below that of her early record. The United Kingdom also enjoyed a prominent place down to 1893 but since that year her imports have constantly decreased until at the close of the American period British trade virtually disappears. Spain's share has been rather insignificant though singularly her largest figures are in the earliest years. The tariff of 1891 exerted little or no stimulus and since the new era but a small amount of trade is shown.

France ranking among the highest in the years immediately following 1885, has had quite a different history in succeeding times. In the heavy declines suffered by others in this trade in 1893 and 1894 she held her own, and in the American period the record of jewelry importations is substantially to be found in a review of the French trade. It was French shipments to the value of over half a million, largely made in anticipation of the new tariff of 1901, that were responsible for the increased trade of that year, and in the succeeding years France has more than two-thirds of the reduced totals.

The United States has figured constantly from 1900, and generally in the third rank as a more or less close competitor of Germany, but the jewelry trade of both these countries is insignificant as compared with that of France, and the skill of the French jeweler, both on the making and introduction of his wares, seems to be well established in the islands.

(a) Hongkong included under British East Indies from 1885-1887, and from 1888-1894 under China.

The extent to which iron and steel is used by a country in this age, which is so peculiarly characterized by these metals, has been said to measure its advance in civilization. Applying this rule of measurement to the Philippines, the standard substantially resolves itself into the annual volume of imports of these metals; since, though iron seems to have been mined and smelted in the islands from early times, generally speaking it is perhaps true that upon no other of the leading imports of the Philippines have the people been so dependent as upon those of iron and steel. The large demand for foreign textiles supplements a product of local fibers and the natives loom that, though not measurable, is generally conceded to be very considerable and in the same way the illuminating oil trade reinforces the pre-existing vegetable resources of the islands.

It is interesting to note in connection with the theory of an increased use of iron and steel being a mark of modern progress, that the Philippine imports for the fifteen years under consideration show a distinctly progressive movement.

The figures of this group for the earlier years of the Spanish period show totals slightly in excess of half a million; during the closing years of the decade the tendency is to run in excess of $800,000; while during the unrecorded period we may infer the same progressive demand, since the quinquennial period 1900-1904 opens with values of $1,487,686, and with the exception of 1901, the banner year of the islands' import trade generally if we exclude rice, show a steady gain up to the maximum total of $2,468,102 in 1904.

During the years 1889 and 1890 of the Spanish decade and coincident with a permanent increase in this trade we find abnormal figures, but these are largely to be explained in the latter year by extensive shipments of railway materials for use in construction of the Manila-Dagupan railway. While no such specific credit is shown in 1888, the abnormal increase there also seems attributable to the same cause, inasmuch as the erection of the railway began in that year and the heavy increases are in this class of supplies.

In iron and steel imports during the Spanish decade the United Kingdom easily enjoyed first rank. She held uniformly more than half the total, and in 1890 and some other years more than two-thirds. This British lead has been maintained in the American period until the present year, though with a reduced ratio. In 1900 she controlled half of the increased total with which the period opens and in the growing volume of business during succeeding years, though absolute gains are made, her proportion of the total drops to about one-third.

The British iron and steel trade in 1904 amounting to $744,329 shows a considerable decline over the previous year in a total that has increased. This is the first year in the fifteen that the United Kingdom has failed to lead, and by considerable odds. The credits of the United States in the present year are $1,100,482, or a little less than half the trade and they would indicate if not the loss of Britain's hold, a future rivalry in the insular iron market, which has for a long time been so exclusively her own. Any prominence in this trade by the United States dates from American occupation or at least from the unrecorded period; though in the year 1889 she is credited with shipments to the value of $100,519, made up almost exclusively of heavy classes of materials, throughout the rest of the decade her shipments never amount to as much as $10,000. With imports valued at $175,543 in 1900, and in the three succeeding years, running in excess of half a million, her trade represents the first serious rivalry encountered by the British, while in the million dollar record of this year we seem to have the culminating conquest of the islands' markets for American iron and steel. A review of the trade in detail while showing some heavy gains in the principal commodities, does not explain clearly the doubling of American shipments in the present year by such exceptional instances. The gains seem to be largely made up of small sums well distributed throughout the many schedules, indicating a wide diffusion of American wares and their constant growth in popular favor.

German iron and steel though second in favor to English in Spanish times did not appreciably participate in the large figures of 1889 and 1890 and is valued oftener below $100,000 a year than in excess of that amount. In the increased figures of the American five years Germany has prospered with a growing trade that in 1903 amounted to very nearly a half million, but in the present year has fallen off to $304,093, and she seems to have suffered as well as the United Kingdom to swell the increased American trade.

France played only a small part in Spanish times, but her iron and steel trade in recent years running somewhat above $100,000 shows that she has more than held her own in the present larger total. Spain figured more irregularly but not much more prominently in the earlier years of the decade. The tariff of 1891 led to increases in succeeding years, Spain being credited with values of $109,335 in 1894; but in American times they have dropped to less than one-fourth of this amount. Belgium is credited with $210,693 in the large total of 1890 and figures to a smaller degree in the previous and following years. Her trade though small in other years has increased during American occupation, but is still short of the hundred thousand dollar mark. China and British East Indies figure in a minor degree throughout the fifteen years after allowing for Hongkong complications. There is an exceptional credit for British East Indies in 1901, amounting to over a quarter of a million, but this is almost exclusively made up of railway rolling stock and would seem from the nature of things a case of trans-shipment.

The analysis of this group in detail throughout cannot be undertaken from the fact that it is made up of such a wide range of articles as to necessitate a more or less arbitrary grouping, and the groupings employed in the three tariff periods are such as to render impossible even a rough approximation for comparative purposes during the fifteen years. Another feature in such a comparison especially in Spanish times, to render it largely superfluous, were it possible, would be the preponderance of British trade, making a review in detail very much a reiteration of the survey of totals.

One conspicuous exception to this is found in the somewhat important item of cutlery, which can be followed throughout and in which German imports have played a generally leading part. This trade scarcely averaged $50,000 in the Spanish decade, but has amounted to more in recent years. Germany found during 1885-1894 an active competitor in the United Kingdom, but in the present time with two-thirds of the cutlery trade of the islands for her own she has no real rival. Under the head of fire-arms we have also an item of separate mention throughout. In the earlier decade this trade was well distributed and does not equal $10,000 in value with the exception of 1886, in which year Spain is credited with quite a large consignment. This trade in the past two years has assumed considerable proportions, in the present year amounting to $58,220,—almost wholly credited to the United States, and no doubt largely due to government purchases in connection with the arming of the insular constabulary. These two items represent but a small percentage of the iron and steel totals made up in great part of cruder and weightier articles, and it is these larger values and miscellaneous features which, in the confusion of varying tariff groupings, render a detailed chronological analysis of the trade impossible.

In the American period the subdivision of the iron and steel group is such as to admit of review in considerable detail. One of the leading items in value is that of sheets and plates of iron, of which the United Kingdom in recent years furnishes practically all. Steel rails in the present year amounting to $132,597 are almost wholly supplied from the same sources, although during 1903 in a larger trade Germany and Belgium led. Bar iron is another feature of the British imports, though in recent years Belgium has become a constant second, while in bar steel France takes the lead this year with the United Kingdom ranking second in a trade that was conspicuously British in previous years. Structural iron and steel in 1904 are chiefly credited to the United States, with the United Kingdom and Belgium competitors for a remote second place in a trade that in previous years was almost entirely British. The miscellaneous tool schedule represents considerable value and we find this trade divided with singular uniformity between the United Kingdom, Germany and the United States up to the present year; but in the increased total of $132,694 in 1904 the United States is credited with a considerable lead over her former competitors. Much the same experience has attended the wire nail trade with the same countries as participants, though the United States has developed more gradually into control of half of this $30,000 trade. In the boiler trade of about $70,000 a year the United Kingdom has enjoyed a prominent place since 1900, subject only to irregular competition from the United States; but in imports of pipes and fittings which have increased rapidly since 1900 and represent a total of $121,948 in the present year the United States has strengthened her lead until she now contributes ninety per cent of the whole.

In the various machinery imports the United States at present holds a pre-eminent position. The American printing press, cash register, typewriter, locomotive and stationary engine seem to have found such favor as to practically exclude all others, and the same may be said of American electrical and pump machinery. Sewing machine imports have largely been in the hands of Germany and the banner year of this trade, 1901, showed the considerable total of $167,712, but in the decline of the present year the German machine has not held its former position, and the American article, a remote second in insular favor since 1900, is a closer competitor than ever before. American safes, cook stoves and scales and balances, however, have no such contested field before them and in the aggregate of this trade for the present year of nearly $30,000 their popularity is proved largely to the exclusion of all others.

(a) Hongkong included under British East Indies from 1885-1887, and from 1888-1894 under China.

In 1885-1890 the yearly imports of chemicals, drugs, paints and dyes are about $400,000 in value, with somewhat abnormal figures in the last year. In the remainder of the Spanish period the totals are only a little more than half this average, while in the American period they exceed a million dollars. Though opium is not separately reported under the Spanish classification, inference furnished by American statistics is that the irregularities in these group totals are to be attributed to fluctuations in the imports of this drug.

In the American period opium represents considerably more than half the imports of the group, and comprises almost the entire credits of British East Indies and China, besides unidentified contributions from Hongkong. Assuming that these sources of the opium trade were constant throughout earlier times, it would seem that the opium trade in the years just following 1885 was less than $300,000 annually. With the tariff of 1891 chemicals and drugs credited to British East Indies and China show a heavy decline with a corresponding effect on the group totals for the succeeding years, previously referred to, a fact to be attributed, perhaps to a change in dealing with these imports or a change in administrative policy which greatly reduced them.

With opium imports in the American period averaging more than half a million dollars, there appears to have been a doubling of the consumption of the drug since 1890. This is in line with findings of the opium committee to the effect that there is a considerable increase in the use of opium from year to year, and seems to furnish ample justification for the appointment of the Opium Investigating Committee, and for the insular government's earnest effort to bring about a satisfactory arrangement or adopt a plan whereby the use of opium may be properly restricted.

In the report of Governor Taft for 1903 in connection with a discussion of the appointment of this committee, it is stated that, "under the Spanish regime Filipinos were under penalty of fine or imprisonment if convicted of smoking opium, but opium joints or smoking places were licensed to be used only by Chinamen. Under the 1901 tariff act now in force the tariff on opium was somewhat reduced, on the theory that a high tax on the importation of the drug increased the smuggling of it. The result is that except for the tariff there is no restriction at all on the sale of opium at present, except that town councils are required to pass ordinances suppressing opium joints." The restrictions here referred to no doubt serve to explain the irregularities of the opium trade in Spanish times above noted, as well as the considerable increase in these imports under the comparatively free conditions of the present. With legislative action in accord with the recommendations of the committee, however, we may look for a rapid decline in the present thriving proportions of the opium trade.

Eliminating this item as far as possible, it appears that there has been a marked increase also in the balance of the chemical, drug and paint trade in American times. In this balance the United Kingdom leads throughout with the exception of the years 1892, 1893 and 1894, and has made conspicuous gains during the American period, while Germany, ranking second from early times, has in the past two years had to give place to the rapidly growing United States trade in this group, which from nominal shipments in the Spanish period has trebled since American occupation. From small imports Spanish trade made large gains after the passage of the tariff of 1891, but the 3d credited with gains during the American period now occupies only a minor place.

During 1885-1890 the various items of this group, with the exception of common salt, seem to have been bulked under a general classification. With the tariff of 1891 a segregation according to the leading commodities was made, but of such a character as to give little comparative value to the figures taken in connection with those of the present time. In 1900-1904 the details entering into the group totals become clearer. Linseed oil and paints and colors are prominent features in which imports the United Kingdom holds the leading place, while in varnishes as well as in patent and proprietary medicines the United States outranks other countries. Mineral waters and other non-alcoholic beverages form another noteworthy item in which imports Japan plays by far the leading part, with the United States a close competitor.

Common salt is the only item that is reported separately and continuously throughout the fifteen years, but the yearly values are small and widely fluctuating.

(a) Hongkong included under British East Indies from 1885-1887, and from 1888-1894 under China.

Importations of glass and earthen wares, earths and stones show a regular and increasing trade during the fifteen years with annual values of about three, four and five hundred thousand dollars respectively, during the first, second and third periods under review. Exceptions to this are the years 1889 and 1890 through abnormal imports of glasswares, and the year 1901 in which a total of $887,876 is reached. But the exceptional character of the figures for the latter year is due largely to an item of $220,758 described as packages paying duty separate from their contents, and apparently involves a question of classification. In succeeding years this item represents but nominal values and the yearly figures of the group are constant at about a half million.

Although the trade as a whole shows regularity, the leading subdivisions of glass and earthen wares are marked by much irregularity; glass imports in particular fluctuate from $91,703 in 1887 to $396,691 in 1889, which latter high record was largely due to shipments unprecedented for a single country amounting to $184,556, and made by the United Kingdom though not before or since has she been a leading figure in this trade.

Glassware imports during the Spanish decade had a less erratic history by countries and Germany was generally the most conspicuous with a trade that seems to have been peculiarly hers in crystal and the higher class wares, though she also shared largely with the United Kingdom and Belgium imports of window glass and common hollow ware. This early prominence of Germany has become a well defined lead in American times, if we discount the prominence given to the United States by what is intended to cover the value of certain bottles apart from their contents in the trade for 1900 and 1901. Next in prominence to Germany has generally been the United Kingdom and she retains this position in the present year with the United States a close third, American imports being valued at $19,073 in a total of $153,511 of which Germany contributes nearly a third.

In the earthen and china ware trade Germany has also held a constant place though a subordinate one with the exception of a few years. China and the United Kingdom have been the leading factors in these imports during most of the fifteen years, the odds being in favor of Britain during the earlier years of the Spanish period, and very much in favor of the latter toward the end, while in recent years the Chinese lead has been slight.

Cement is the only other item in the group of much value that admits of separate treatment, and the usual annual imports in the earlier years of the Spanish period appear to have been only about $25,- 000, though 1888 and 1889 are large exceptions when the trade is three times this figure. This increase is, coincident with the building of the Manila-Dagupan Railway and no doubt figured largely in its bridge construction. In the succeeding year cement is no longer separately reported, but in the American period we find a large increase in the demand for this very important material of modern construction, the average running nearer $90,000 in value. The present year has witnessed a large increase, with a total of $206,684, but this exceptional sum is no doubt due in great measure to large orders in connection with the extensive harbor improvements in progress in the islands. In Spanish times down to 1890 the United Kingdom had a monopoly of this trade, but in that year China, or probably Hongkong, took the lead and Hongkong has in the American period been the chief source of supply down to the present year. China from a small trade in recent years has however, contributed a value of $124,741 in 1904 or over half of the large total of that year.

(a) Hongkong included under British East Indies from 1885-1887, and from 1888-1894 under China.

The increase in the paper trade of the islands since 1885 bears out the general experience of the world due to cheapened production and the increased activity of the printing press, these imports having about doubled in the twenty years that have elapsed. A further interest attaches to the figures when viewed by countries. China the traditional inventor of paper, as well as pioneer in the printing trade supplied the Philippine market in earlier years, a fact due probably to her juxtaposition rather than her historic place in the industry but in recent years she all but disappears from the field while the United States with the most modern processes has obtained the lead in the paper market of the islands.

The total paper trade of the Spanish period amounting to about $400,000 in the opening years increased to a scant half million toward the end. Importations at the opening of the American period are about the same as the last Spanish figures, but with irregular increases thereafter they reach $812,172 in the present year.

In the earlier half of the Spanish decade China and Spain controlled over half of the total, with China's share about double that of Spain's. Under the tariff of 1891, though they jointly held as high as eighty per cent of the trade Spain reversed positions in the closing years, doubled the Chinese imports of paper goods and contributed herself half the total.

In the American period the leading feature has been the increased trade and the taking of this increase by the United States. Spain fails to hold her own and China has a minor place; but the losses in the paper trade of these countries are about counterbalanced by corresponding gains of France and Germany. German paper imports suffered a heavy decline in the latter part of the Spanish decade, but with imports valued at $70,427 in 1904, has since more than recovered her former position; while France, from small figures during 1885-1894 reaches a total of $97,674 in this year, and is surpassed only by the United States and Spain. The United Kingdom has played but a minor part throughout and in recent years her figures are about what they were in the beginning of the period under review.

Writing and printing papers and blank books represent the leading value under the above grouping during the Spanish period, of which China and Spain are the chief contributors, with the reversal in their relative prominence just referred to. The wrapping paper trade of about $50,000 annual value is almost wholly credited to China, but this is counterbalanced in a measure by the trade in printed books which naturally was a virtual monopoly of Spain.

The paper trade according to commodities cannot be very effectively compared in detail with American times owing to differences in classification and changed conditions. In the larger totals of recent years under the head of paper pulp we have the most prominent item, representing a uniform value of about a quarter of a million. The bulk of this is credited to France, Spain, the United States and Austria-Hungary. In 1901 the United States was foremost with more than half the total, but in succeeding years France has the largest credits, with $84,572 in the present year and the other three countries slightly less than $50,000 each.

In the paper trade of the American period in its more restricted sense the United States and Spain have been rivals for the lead and sharers of more than half the total with Germany in third rank, due to a prominent place in the supply of printing paper.

The book imports of the Spanish period rarely reached $25,000. In recent years books have not been separately reported, but are found in connection with maps and scientific instruments for the use of schools, which in the present year reach a value of $301,041. After making large discounts for these inclusions it seems a safe conclusion that there has been an enormous growth in the printed book imports of the islands. This trade has nearly quadrupled since 1900 the heaviest growth being in the past two years, and is most manifest in the schedule devoted to school books and the supplies above referred to which in 1904 represent a value of $158,352.

The book trade, so exclusively Spanish before has of course been affected by the introduction of a new language in the islands. The United States has steadily paralleled the book trade of Spain with yearly gains until with the recent increased demand for school books the American imports in the present year have reached $184,454 while the Spanish are $57,493. Spain thus shows substantial gains over the earlier period resulting from this increased demand for books, though the bulk of the increase falls to the United States.

(a) Hongkong included under British East Indies from 1885-1887 and from 1888-1894 under China.

The annual imports of wood and wood manufactures present many irregularities during the fifteen years, partly due to variations in classification and partly to new developments in certain branches of the trade.

During 1885-1890 this group was practically made up of a single schedule of furniture with only nominal imports of unmanufactured woods besides. It would seem, however, that term "furniture" was used in a far more comprehensive sense than is usually understood and embraced also a large variety of articles used in house furnishing that in later times are to be found in other schedules. This explains the large totals of the earlier Spanish years which in 1886 reached $606,160 and amounted to about a quarter of a million in other years.

With the tariff of 1891 in effective operation the group totals drop to less than a hundred thousand due to a more restricted classification, and the annual furniture imports of these later years of Spanish rule, averaging about fifty thousand dollars, are fairly consistent with though somewhat less than those of American times.

The very large increase in the total of wood imports from two to six hundred thousand dollars during the American period, is to be almost wholly credited to an enormous growth in the lumber trade.

Importations of unmanufactured wood in the Spanish period averaged but a few thousand dollars yearly. The primitive insular saw-mill and the hand-sawn board seem to have been able to meet the lumber demands of the islands, but in the American period notwithstanding the rich timber field that the islands afford, there is a steadily increasing demand for foreign woods, with lumber imports in the present year of not far from half a million dollars.

In addition to the limited facilities for transporting timber to tidewater, many elements enter into this situation, chief among which is doubtless the general effort toward improvement and reconstruction that has attended the American occupation, as well as the restoration made necessary by the ravages of insurrection. A further factor is perhaps to be found in the advance in wages, operating to check local lumber production by the uneconomical methods in vogue. The statistical fact is that with lumber imports of less than $8,000 for a maximum during the Spanish decade, they were $93,457 in 1900, and with heavy increases since have reached $454,659 in the present year and this in a region that counts its timber as one of its most valuable assets.

There are indications that these increasing imports will not long continue. Large capital has been enlisted for the exploitation of the Philippine forests, and as soon as present enterprises in this field get into active operation it is to be anticipated that progressive American logging and lumbering methods will not only put an early check to the present increase but will in time turn the tide of imports into exports.

The small lumber imports of the Spanish regime seem to have been chiefly a Hongkong trade and doubtless the United States had a share in it. Since 1900 these imports have been increasingly American and are now very largely so. British East Indies has been a competitor and Australasia in the latest years has figured especially in logs and hewn timber, but with a lead of more than half the islands' timber trade the supremacy of the United States in the market seems assured so long as lumber imports are required.

The furniture trade has been subject to considerable rivalry during the fifteen years, with Germany's showing in it perhaps the most consistent throughout. During the earlier part of the Spanish period she gave place to the United Kingdom who took the lead for some years, and later what seems to have been largely Hongkong trade in the guise of Chinese took the first rank. In the American period, however, the United Kingdom almost disappears from the field and Germany from a strong second place has the furniture trade much to herself during the first years. From 1902 the United States who in Spanish times figured only nominally becomes an aggressive competitor, and in 1904 takes first place with more than double the German trade and nearly half the furniture total. The Spanish furniture trade has figured with considerable constancy throughout the fifteen years but not very conspicuously.

(a) Hongkong included under British East Indies from 1885-1887, and from 1888-1894 under China.

The oil imports of the islands are virtually covered in a review of the illuminating oil trade. During 1885-1890 the group totals are made up of mineral and lubricating oils. In 1891-1894 crude petroleum, lubricating and vegetable oils other than olive are also included, and this applies as well to the totals of American times with the further exception of linseed oil. These items, however, though somewhat swelling the group totals especially in American times, are relatively small and the group totals are analyzed by giving the history of refined petroleum in the islands.

With an import average of illuminating oils for the fifteen years amounting to about half a million, the yearly fluctuations were extreme in the Spanish period. Opening with a minimum trade of $137,068 in 1885, in both 1890 and 1893 it reached about a million in value and closed the recorded Spanish period with a sum of $703,445. In the American period though there has been a steady increase yearly the trade opens with only about half the values of the closing Spanish period and only in the present year with illuminating oil imports amounting to $746,000, have these closing figures of that period been reached. It would seem that in the later Spanish years the imports of illuminating oils were considerably in excess of those of American times.

In a consideration of this trade by countries although other countries, especially China figure in it to minor degrees, the matter seems to resolve itself into an American and Russian trade, while the fifteen years sub-divides into two periods: one of American supremacy and the other of Russo-American rivalry.

The earlier advent of the American oil fields into the world supply is evidenced in the remote market of the Philippines, where after discounting the ambiguous Hongkong trade which was doubtless American, the United States product seems to have enjoyed a virtual monopoly down to 1892. The development of the Russian oil fields of the Caspian does not seem to have been at all felt in the insular market prior to that year.
